I attached the TF 153 PERSTAT. In addition to location changes for 2, (two personnel in TX, aka. FOB 2 in column H) there was a change to the roster. SFC [REDACTED] from the 200th replaced SPC [REDACTED], also from the 200th.

Here's the issue I've been having. The documents have PII on them. I can't send them over through regular email and our encrypted emails will not display for you and vis versa.

I can mail them to you, however our printing capabilities are down for the ENTIRE National Guard (Across America....I can't make this up). NGB is currently work on the fix but, unit then, I have no way of getting you the paperwork without driving to Pierre again, or sending PII through an open network. So....(insert shoulder shrug emoji).

Just to clarify, we think 6:45 am is the best time for her to address them and not earlier? I see they load the buses at 6:30.

Appreciate this information, I just heard back from the Governor and she'll be busy until late Wednesday evening so we're planning on Thursday morning at 6:45 am as suggested.

Subject: RE: [EXT] [Non-DoD Source] SDNG Departure to TX - G1 Schedule

Hi [REDACTED],

I just confirmed that they will be loading at 6:30 and departing at 7:00 – 7:15. I think 6:45 would be a good time for her to visit with them for a few minutes and then greet each soldier as they head out to load the bus.

I will be down there on Wednesday to visit with them, but have other obligations on Thursday morning. The Battalion Command, LTC [REDACTED] and the Administrative Officer, MAJ [REDACTED] will be on hand to facilitate Gov. Noem's time with the soldiers.

Please let me know if she is definitely going and I will make sure everything is in place for her time with the unit. Just as a reminder, the NG Armory in Huron is on the State Fair Fairgrounds. It is right next door to the old 4-H dorms, which the Governor is very familiar with.

[REDACTED] - I didn't see anything on Governors calendar Thursday morning for the departure of the sdng soldiers bound for Texas. Please work with General Marlette and his staff on what a send off by the Governor would look like that morning in Huron and ensure the Governor has a chance to decide whether that will work for her schedule.

We would normally do an activation ceremony for a deployment so marking this departure somehow is important in my view. We shouldn't overlook it.

Sir,

Could you send me the scrubbed roster for those soldiers that need a hotel in Huron? I'll make sure to send it to OEM so they can have a good number for reservations.

We currently have a block of 50 rooms reserved. However, we'd like to give them a final roster so they can reduce the amount of reservations if needed. I appreciate your help on this.

[REDACTED],

Can you look at reducing your packing list? There shouldn't be a need for cots etc. We know the troops have a motel. I guess the inquiry about availability of a trailer for the bus could come through [REDACTED], I know he talked to the bussing company yesterday. I think if that was an option we could adjust the contract. Other option is asking the state for an enclosed trailer to pull behind the pickup.

Alcon,

Spoke with [REDACTED] and his team and if they go from two buses to one, recommend trying to get a trailer for their gear. The original reason we went with two buses was to eliminate the need for a container.

[REDACTED], can you see if state can adjust the contract and add a trailer? If not, I recommend staying the course with two buses.

Standing by.

One question I have is

Does it really take two buses? Especially now that we now have four vehicles trailing along.

Good copy Sir, I very much appreciate the information as I am new to the process from a CIO perspective.

With the Holiday weekend in front of us I felt it was important to get the resources to that side of the state, knowing a decision could be made to take or leave the equipment.

I will stay in closer communications on future missions.

Have a safe weekend.

Subject: FW: CIO Equipment

Afternoon Gentlemen,

As reminder, when a unit [or personnel] is/are on state active duty [SAD] OR if the equipment being requested is ISO of SAD mission, the first stop for resourcing is with the DOMS [LOG/Admin; [REDACTED]] section of the J3/5/7. From there, either [REDACTED] or LTC [REDACTED] will coordinate with their OEM counterpart to fill the request. If the State-OEM is unable to fill the request for equipment the DOMS will first seek approval from the USPFO [J8] to utilize SDNG resources [e.g. MiFis, Computers, Cellphones, etc.] on the SAD mission. After receiving permission from the J8, DOMS will come coordinate with the CIO to keep it all legal and all of us out of jail.

We are always available to help guide or discuss by phone, text, email or in-person....the DOMS/OEM/EMAC...it can be understandably confusing if you not used to dealing with it.

Thanks in advance for your help in this matter...

[REDACTED],

After discussing with USPFO, take the 4 cell phones, 4 laptops, 2 MiFi, and 2 cradle points and secure them in the armory. They are not to be used until we exhaust the request to the state at which time CIO would need to determine costs associated with the usage of this equipment for mission.

Good evening,

Today's events:

Started the day off with a directorate sync at 0900 followed by a conference call with TX at 1000. We ironed out quite a few details during the call and discovered SD OEM is paying for everything, contrary to some previous information received. This was good so we could move on with our planning. With that said:

De-conflicted qualifying on assigned weapons in TX. This will be completed in Mitchel the morning of 07 July. G3 has secured 5.56 ammo. SD Highway Patrol has ammo for 9mm qual.

Motel rooms are reserved at the Mainstay in Edinburg TX. 48 rooms for the duration of the mission. Motel waiting payment from SDOEM.

Shopping list for batteries, bugspray, sunscreen etc sent to SD OEM. They will work the list to purchase and have items available for pick-up by MSgt [REDACTED] on 6 July.

Rental vehicles/GSA's in TX. Available to us to rent. At this point we made the decision to use the state fleet vehicles. We have secured 2 suburbans, 1 tahoe, and 1 four door pick-up which will all be ready on 1000, 6 July. They will trail the busses to TX and swap drivers along the way.

Clarification on the work schedule in TX. 5 days of duty in a row, 8-10 hours per day. 2 days off.

Request sent to SD OEM to provide 2 cell phones, 2 Mi-Fis and laptop.

SD OEM has coordinated and purchased commercial airfare for ADVON ([REDACTED]) on 7 July. [REDACTED] will go through DTS

Confirmed 2 charter busses for 0630 in Huron on 8 July.

No change with commercial line haul although [REDACTED] at state gives us a warm fuzzy we are good.

EMAC signed by SD and TX. I attached the unsigned copy.

Good copy Sir, I very much appreciate the information as I am new to the process from a CIO perspective.

With the Holiday weekend in front of us I felt it was important to get the resources to that side of the state, knowing a decision could be made to take or leave the equipment.

I will stay in closer communications on future missions.

Have a safe weekend.

Subject: FW: CIO Equipment

Afternoon Gentlemen,

As reminder, when a unit [or personnel] is/are on state active duty [SAD] OR if the equipment being requested is ISO of SAD mission, the first stop for resourcing is with the DOMS [LOG/Admin; [REDACTED]] section of the J3/5/7. From there, either [REDACTED] or LTC [REDACTED] will coordinate with their OEM counterpart to fill the request. If the State-OEM is unable to fill the request for equipment the DOMS will first seek approval from the USPFO [J8] to utilize SDNG resources [e.g. MiFis, Computers, Cellphones, etc.] on the SAD mission. After receiving permission from the J8, DOMS will come coordinate with the CIO to keep it all legal and all of us out of jail.

We are always available to help guide or discuss by phone, text, email or in-person....the DOMS/OEM/EMAC...it can be understandably confusing if you not used to dealing with it.

Thanks in advance for your help in this matter...

After discussing with USPFO, take the 4 cell phones, 4 laptops, 2 MiFi, and 2 cradle points and secure them in the armory. They are not to be used until we exhaust the request to the state at which time CIO would need to determine costs associated with the usage of this equipment for mission.

That many batteries will be a major challenge for us to get at one time.

Why the TP? I understand not wanting to run into a situation of not having any, but I would think facilities will be available.

Sir,

Could you send me the scrubbed roster for those soldiers that need a hotel in Huron? I'll make sure to send it to OEM so they can have a good number for reservations.

We currently have a block of 50 rooms reserved. However, we'd like to give them a final roster so they can reduce the amount of reservations if needed. I appreciate your help on this.

Good morning.

I reserved a block of rooms for the National Guard. They will be checking in on July 6, 2021 and checking out on July 8, 2021

At the time I reserved 50 rooms, I asked you to put the reservation under Office of Emergency Management. The rooms will still be direct billed to The Office of Emergency Management (Department of Public Safety), but I need you to assign each room a name of a soldier which I have provided on the attached document.

Please assign each soldier a room and send me their individual room confirmation email so that I may get it to their Sgt. I had reserved 50 rooms and as you are able to see on the attached list we are only going to need 46, so please adjust our reservation and remove 4 of the rooms.

If you have any questions please let me know. You may get ahold of me today and tomorrow on my work cell [REDACTED] or email me at [REDACTED]@state.sd.us <Caution-[mailto:\[REDACTED\]@state.sd.us](mailto:[REDACTED]@state.sd.us)> 8:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Sir,

Could you send me the scrubbed roster for those soldiers that need a hotel in Huron? I'll make sure to send it to OEM so they can have a good number for reservations.

We currently have a block of 50 rooms reserved. However, we'd like to give them a final roster so they can reduce the amount of reservations if needed. I appreciate your help on this.

Gentlemen,

Looks like we need to bring our own batteries to support our equipment. Does the state have a way to purchase?

They also brought up bug spray and a plethora of other items.

Gents,

Just received a phone call from the S4 office of the 153rd. They have made contact with SFC [REDACTED] who is the TF S4 in Texas.

They asked what kind of support is available should they need stuff.

He said none and currently with 400 Soldiers they are going through about 12,000 batteries a week. Break down is basically 30 per soldier per week. This is for the NVGs, Thermals etc. They would need around 9,000 batteries for 50 pax for 45 days.

I told them to send their requirements to the JOC to see if the state will go out and purchase the items.

They also brought up bug spray and a plethora of other items.

Just wanted let you all know.

Good morning [REDACTED] and [REDACTED],

Below is information for the companies our logistics section received estimates for the line haul of vehicles and charter busses. Would it help you if I gave you CPT [REDACTED] info and work directly with him for any questions? He would have all the heights/weights/dimensions needed of the specific rolling stock. The quote below was for the 11 HUMMV's and there are 3 additional pieces, the wrecker, contact truck, and LMTV. Quadcon is not needed due to two busses as we feel we can get everything on the busses.

I have a brief to MG Marlette at 0800 MST. I threw a power point presentation together last night I will be reference. Please take a look and see if I am missing any pertinent info. If you can give [REDACTED] or I a call in the next 45 min or so, that would be great to touch base before I brief the general.

Sir,

I have the quotes you requested for Commercial line haul and commercial bus support.

Commercial line haul: Global Tranz Trucking Company

One way from Huron, SD to Weslako, TX. To Move 11 up armored HMMWV + 1 QUADCON ----->
$40,000 This Price is for 6 Flat bed Trucks

Commercial Bus Movement: Reading Bus Lines

One way from Huron, SD to Weslako, TX. 1 Bus/50 Usable Seats W/ storage underneath bus for baggage -----
-> $10,160.00 This price is only for 1 bus and only one way. If there are 2 busses then the price is double.

With the current economy and the fluctuation in fuel prices the cost estimate could increase/decrease for the return trip.

Hit send to soon.

Everyone stay on your "A" game on this. People will be asking questions. Our position is we don't discuss the donation. We received a SAD Mission, just like every other. Our reimbursement comes from OEM (State $), just like it always does.

We don't comment on mission specifics, for security reasons. All requests for information get referred to our PAO.

Governor Noem will be doing a press release later today.

1. SD, TX: Military.com (National) – Billionaire GOP Mega-Donor Funds National Guard Mission to US-Mexico Border – By Steve Beynon

The South Dakota National Guard is deploying on mission to the U.S. southern border. And the operation is being funded by a billionaire, not the government, Military.com has learned. Soldiers will serve on state active-duty orders, meaning that traditionally the state would cover the cost of the mission. However, in this case the tab is being picked up by the private Tennessee-based Willis and Reba Johnson’s Foundation.

The now vintage photo of Maj. General Sherrie L. McCandless standing next to her F-16 fighter jet evokes both a scene from Top Gun, and a sea change in the military. McCandless earned her wings during the dawn of a new era for the Air Force – the end of women being excluded from flying combat aircraft in the '90s, and the beginning of expanding possibilities for women in uniform. No longer was McCandless training in the backseat of a cockpit, but was ascending to new leadership roles in South Korea, Arizona, and South Carolina.

Insomnia compelled Morgan Davis to seek refuge on a small backyard patio offering sanctuary from the downward spiral of her career in the Kansas Army National Guard. 1. SD, TX: Military.com (National) – Billionaire GOP Mega-Donor Funds National Guard Mission to US-Mexico Border – By Steve Beynon

The South Dakota National Guard is deploying on mission to the U.S. southern border. And the operation is being funded by a billionaire, not the government, Military.com has learned.

Soldiers will serve on state active-duty orders, meaning that traditionally the state would cover the cost of the mission. However, in this case the tab is being picked up by the private Tennessee-based Willis and Reba Johnson’s Foundation.

“The border is a national security crisis that requires the kind of sustained response only the National Guard can provide,” South Dakota Gov. Kristi Noem, a Republican, said in a statement Tuesday.

Roughly 50 guardsmen will deploy on the mission, according to a South Dakota Guard spokesman. However, the mission is still in its early planning stages. It’s unclear where the troops will deploy on the border, which unit will be sent or what the mission will be.

The National Guard declined to comment for this story or answer questions about the practice of allowing private donors to fund missions. A query to the Pentagon about the mission did not receive a response.

Willis Johnson is the founder of Copart, an online vehicle auction service, and has amassed a $2.2 billion fortune, according to Forbes. He resigned as CEO of Copart in 2010, according to reporting from the Nashville Post.

He is a Republican mega-donor, donating at least $1.5 million to conservative causes, including $50,000 to the “Trump Victory” political action committee, according to reporting from Bloomberg.

Former President Donald Trump made border security a key part of his presidency, ordering the deployment of troops to the border in April 2018 under a mission known as Operation Faithful Patriot. One of President Joe Biden’s first acts as president was to suspend Trump’s emergency declaration at the border, halting some government funds. The Associated Press reported that Trump is expected to visit the border with Texas Gov. Greg Abbott, a Republican, later this week.

Ian Fury, a spokesman for Noem, wouldn’t confirm if Willis Johnson runs the foundation. When Military.com reached Johnson via telephone, he wouldn’t confirm his identity and declined to be interviewed.

However, tax forms including for the foundation and donation records for Johnson share the same address in Franklin, Tennessee.

“Governor Noem welcomes any such donations to help alleviate the cost to South Dakota taxpayers,” Fury told Military.com. Fury declined to disclose how much of a donation was made to cover the mission, saying revealing that would be “a security risk.”

2. DC: WUSA (Regional) – Veteran fighter pilot makes history as 1st woman to lead DC National Guard
– By Mike Valerio

The now vintage photo of Maj. General Sherrie L. McCandless standing next to her F-16 fighter jet evokes both a scene from Top Gun, and a sea change in the military.

McCandless earned her wings during the dawn of a new era for the Air Force – the end of women being excluded from flying combat aircraft in the ‘90s, and the beginning of expanding possibilities for women in uniform. No longer was McCandless training in the backseat of a cockpit, but was ascending to new leadership roles in South Korea, Arizona, and South Carolina.

She remembers the pilots who guided her, who said the days of female combat exclusion were numbered. They turned around to speak to her from the front seat, and said McCandless could help usher in a new chapter for the military.

“They encouraged me, and they said, ‘hey, someday it’ll change,’” McCandless said. “They have daughters. And I think was an awakening moment for them to think, ‘wow, my daughter could be completely able to do this, from a physical and a mental standpoint, but won’t be able to for one reason.’”

McCandless, 51, now finds herself in another moment of U.S. military history – serving as the first female leader of the D.C National Guard.

Beginning April 25, 2021, McCandless oversaw the end of the D.C. Guard’s security mission at the Capitol, at a time when the Guard’s role in Washington was redefined, and may still change in the months ahead.

She serves as the D.C. Guard's interim commanding general, appointed to the role after her predecessor, Maj. Gen. William Walker, became the new Sergeant-at-Arms for the U.S. House of Representatives. Her fate now lies with President Joe Biden, who is expected to decide over the next few months if McCandless will fill the position permanently.

In her first interview since assuming the role, McCandless said the 2,700 soldiers and airmen under her command would not be put under immense strain if Congress decides to create a "strike force" of Guard members assisting U.S. Capitol Police. She affirmed one of her top priorities is to improve the speed and efficiency of communication with federal and District law enforcement, should another episode of insurrection threaten the heart of American democracy.

Yet her concerns are also focused on new outreach to the people of the District, expanding a program to instill leadership in teenagers who've dropped out of high school.

McCandless said she is also mindful of allowing Guard members adequate time to reconnect with families, following months of unprecedented service.

"We just have to make sure that we're constantly looking at evaluating balancing," McCandless said. "It's a constant evolution. We can never let rest on where we are."

A Possible U.S. Capitol Strike Force

Within a $1.9 billion Capitol security bill, passed by one vote in the House, Democratic lawmakers authored the creation of a quick-reacting force of National Guard members on U.S. Capitol grounds. The aim of the force would be to assist Capitol Police, should a scenario similar to the January 6 insurrection repeat once more.

Republican lawmakers oppose the measure, with Sen. Jim Inhofe (R-Okla.) and Rep. Mike Rogers (R-Ala.) writing in a joint statement, "use of the uniformed military in D.C. and the Capitol Complex is subject to complex statutory restrictions, and for good reason."

"We cannot and should not militarize the security of the Capitol Complex."

While McCandless and the Guard take no position on the matter, leaving the decision to civilian lawmakers, the general said such a force would not strain the Guard's command structure, or its personnel.

"I think that the planning would need to take place, but I don't see any major changes required," McCandless said.

When asked if major shifts would be required to make such a force work, McCandless replied, "Not in my opinion."

McCandless stressed the D.C. Guard serves as a force of last resort, after law enforcement exhausted all its resources. Yet she affirmed under her command, the Guard would respond to a potential Capitol crisis with greater speed than what was seen in January.

"I'm on my 60th day [leading the D.C. Guard,]" McCandless said. "And I've spent a lot of those days connecting with my downtown partners. So, U.S. Capitol Police chief, U.S. Park Police chief, the mayor's office. I'm making sure that we are communicating, we know who each other are, and kind of where the National Guard in D.C. is at this time."

"I've been able to participate with some of our team at the Defense Department also, who has obviously been looking into and interested in those response times," she continued. "There's a great amount of learning and collaboration going on at this time to ensure that if and when we have our federal or District partners that require our assistance or the assistance of the National Guard, that we're in a better place."

Reaching out to the D.C. Community

McCandless is the granddaughter of an Iwo Jima Marine Corps veteran, who landed 45 minutes into the first wave of U.S. troops on the island. PFC Theodore Below helped raised McCandless, and instilled within the future D.C. Guard commander a sense of service which persists into the present.

“He actually still lives with me in my home in Washington, D.C.,” McCandless said. “The foundation he built for me always provided a very clear sight picture for me about the criticality of service.”

The arc of service could be seen in a hangar at Joint Base Andrews, when McCandless joined more than 30 D.C. teenagers for an up-close look at F-16 fighters.

The adolescents recently dropped out of high school, but are now back on the path to a diploma. They are enrolled in the D.C. Guard program, known as the “Capital Guardian Youth ChalleNGe Academy.”

“In that 16 to 18-year-old range, as we all know, there are a lot of distractions and there’s a lot of competing priorities in their lives,” McCandless said. “And I think what we’re able to offer to them is a safe environment to go into, inspired by the military, but having no outcome to join the military.”

McCandless described the program neither as bootcamp, nor ROTC, but as a five-month full-time living experience on a D.C. Guard suburban campus in Laurel, Md.

“It allows them to re-engage in physical fitness activities, understanding how to balance a checkbook, understanding the criticality of their diet and how that feeds them and they basically learn skills that we think that will help them complete their education, join the workforce, and then come back into the D.C. community,” she said.

Online applications for the fall 2021 program are now open, with McCandless setting a goal to expand the academy’s enrollment and recognition as a force for change. Cadets are under no obligation to join the Guard upon completion of the program.

D.C. Guard Moving Forward

“We have an F-16 mission that’s getting ready to depart for the Middle East, and we also have National Guardsmen that have departed to go down to Guantánamo,” the general offered, describing ongoing operations after the U.S. Capitol mission. “We’re always constantly making sure we’re prepared for the overseas war fight – that’s the core mission of what we do. But we also have to maintain and train our readiness as almost a byproduct of that federal mission, to respond to natural disasters and manmade disasters inside the United States.”

McCandless described as the D.C. Guard moves forward, post-insurrection, her mission is to help its airmen and soldiers reconnect – first with their families, then with their civilian jobs balanced alongside National Guard duties.

“Simultaneously, the country is coming out of the pandemic. So there’s the desire for guardsmen to get out, socialize again,” she said.

“We’re also going to start working again on some of the basic military skills that they did not have the opportunity to train on while they were doing the Capitol mission.”

At an expansive moment for the Guard in the public consciousness, McCandless said she feels prepared to meet the expectations of the city and the nation. Once as a pilot in her 20’s who helped shape the face of the U.S. military, she now says she turns to the needs of the Guard in the nation’s capital, a new arena to engage in a commanding change.

“It’s really about the competency of the individuals and how they’ve been prepared through their lives to ascend to these roles,” McCandless said. “I’ve been trying to prepare myself all along for roles that the military may ask me to perform... And I’m excited that it’s now with the Guard where I call home.”

4. CA: Los Angeles Times (National) – As the West begins to burn, Biden to talk wildfires with Newsom and other governors – By Reporter

President Biden will meet Wednesday with Cabinet officials and leaders from Western states, including California Gov. Gavin Newsom, as he faces what could be another devastating year of wildfires with drought conditions worsening and searing temperatures spreading.

The situation has alarmed experts and public officials, who warn that this year's fire season could outpace last year's, which was the worst on record. Blazes have already ignited around California, where dry vegetation has left large swaths of the state primed to explode into flames, even as the federal government struggles to hire firefighters.

"We're in as high risk of a starting condition as we could ever expect," said Noah Diffenbaugh, a Stanford University professor who studies climate change and wildfires.

The California National Guard deployed a month earlier than last year, sending helicopters to drop water on the Lava fire near Mt. Shasta. It's the largest active fire in the state, burning more than 13,000 acres since sparking Thursday, and Newsom announced Tuesday that the federal government was going to help cover some of the costs.

Western states are eager for Washington to step up its commitment after President Trump repeatedly blamed them – particularly California, which he said failed to "clean your forests" of combustible vegetation – for failing to prevent and stop wildfires.

The threat comes amid staffing shortages at the U.S. Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management, problems exacerbated by low pay, competition from state and local fire departments and exhaustion from last year's fire season.

More than a month after seasonal hiring would typically have ended, the federal government is still trying to fill vacant positions on hot shot crews, the most elite and experienced firefighting teams. Although these crews are venerated for leading the attack against the most difficult fires, some have had so many veteran firefighters quit that they've been downgraded to a lower-ranking status.

Nationally, fire management teams are having to compete with each other for crews and equipment much earlier in the season than in years past. On June 22, the National Interagency Fire Center, which coordinates fire response from Boise, Idaho, raised the national preparedness to level 4 on a 1 to 5 scale, saying it was the second earliest it had reached that point.

The shortages have filled crews on the fire lines with anxiety and led to louder calls for change.

“We’re at a point where we’re simply going to be overwhelmed year after year going forward given the current systems we have in place,” said Jim Whittington, an expert in wildland fire response. “We really need to look at the way we staff and work wildland fires, the way we fund them, and the way we take care of our people. We need a full reset.”

Along with calls for higher pay – a first-year Forest Service firefighter currently earns a base wage of $13.45 an hour – there are those like Whittington who believe firefighting needs to become a full-time job. Currently, the federal government fills its ranks each summer with thousands of seasonal firefighters who don’t get health insurance and are laid off after about six months. Some of these workers struggle at the end of the season as months of stress take their toll.

“We also need better mental health support for wildland firefighters,” Whittington said. “Too many face a crisis when they are laid off.”

Biden said last week that he was surprised to learn that some federal firefighters earn so little.

“That’s a ridiculously low salary,” he said, banging his hand on a table in the Roosevelt Room in the White House during a meeting with emergency officials.

Ben Elkind, a smokejumper for the forest service and a member of Grassroots Wildland Firefighters, a group that advocates for better pay and working conditions for federal firefighters, said the problem has left critical positions empty.

“People risking their lives for our public safety deserve to be paid a living wage,” he said.

5. KS: Kansas Reflector (Regional) – Kansas Guard veteran worn down from years battling leadership over misconduct, retaliation – By Tim Carpenter

Insomnia compelled Morgan Davis to seek refuge on a small backyard patio offering sanctuary from the downward spiral of her career in the Kansas Army National Guard.

On that November evening, the outdoor cocoon proved insufficient. Davis drove to a convenience store in Topeka where the mission was to slip in and out unrecognized, part of a concerted effort to adopt a lower-profile approach to living. As she exited the business, she bumped into a former Kansas Guard officer. Casual banter took a different tone by shifting to Davis’ military status.

“I just started shaking,” Davis said. “I can’t think. I can’t breathe. My mind just goes blank.”

The fractured bones of Davis’ 21-year Army career – reports, correspondence, testimony, photos, complaints, notes and emails – could fill boxes. The flesh of her military ordeal took shape during a review of those documents and through sporadic conversations and interviews beginning five years ago and intensifying after her retirement in 2020.

Davis said her life in uniform ended prematurely because of an unwillingness to look the other way at perceived wrongdoing in the Kansas Guard. She attempted to work within boundaries of the military system while filing reports or complaints ranging in subject from administrative corruption to sexual abuse to distortion of the promotion process. She raised alarms about personal issues as well as situations involving others in the Kansas Guard.

Substance of those allegations catapulted Davis into years of conflict with command staff that viewed complainants as irritating troublemakers ripe for expulsion.

Davis said her lonely campaign was aimed at bringing accountability and transparency to the insular Kansas Guard, especially actions of some high-ranking staff allied with then-Adjutant General Lee Tafari. For nine years, the general was responsible for training and readiness of 7,000 personnel in the Army and Air components of the Kansas Guard. He served as senior military adviser to Govs. Sam Brownback, Jeff Colyer and Laura Kelly before retiring in March 2020.

Davis' struggle evolved to emphasize self-defense as individuals within the Kansas Guard retaliated against her, she said. Her best asset was technical expertise in personnel policy and procedure acquired in service of the Kansas Guard. She said she proceeded under threat of reassignment to a lesser position, loss of promotion and firing.

"It wasn't ever about me until it was survival," Davis said. "Everything that could have gone wrong with the process went wrong."

The battle ended last year with her departure from the Kansas Guard and the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs affirming her disability for post-traumatic stress disorder.

"I'm still not over my breakup with the Army," Davis said. "I have a hard time talking about it. When I see people from the military, period, it is extremely distressing. I see the uniform, and then the alarms start going off. I follow from their feet up to the face. Even if I don't know them, it's upsetting."

Maj. Gen. David Weishaar, who has led the Kansas Guard since April 2020, wasn't able to discuss personnel issues of current or former soldiers and airmen.

Weishaar said his commitment during 40 years of service was to foster a culture of dignity and respect and to compel troops to apply standards equally.

"That is what I try to convey across the force," Weishaar said. "It doesn't matter if you're, in my case, a two-star general, or if you're a one-striper. The expectation is the same. Do we have people do dumb things? Absolutely. Whatever goes on in the community is happening in the force."

Weishaar said members of the Kansas Guard were expected to work daily to live up to military values and to better respond to societal problems of mental health, suicide, sexual abuse, gender-based harassment and other issues inevitably filtering into the armed forces. The Kansas Guard has adopted a series of programs to help members prevent, manage or overcome impediments to their service, he said.

Reform of military culture is a special challenge when only one-fourth of Kansas Guard employees work full-time and the part-timers report for duty as little as twice a month, the general said.

Paper warfare

Davis was instigator of reports aimed at members of the Kansas Guard reaching back to 2008, when she accused an officer of administrative fraud, waste and abuse. In a subsequent matter, Davis was ordered to be part of an investigation into allegations that officers and enlisted personnel participated in a sex scandal. She understood sensitivity of that inquiry and her involvement in the case didn't go unnoticed by peers, she said.

"I have a moral compass," Davis said. "My right and wrong does not have a gray."

In 2013, Davis said, Kansas Guard officers conspired to delay or block her from appearing before a promotion board necessary to climb the ladder to chief warrant officer 3. She responded by submitting a complaint alleging inappropriate influence on command. The Kansas Guard's inspector general found elements of reprisal, she said, before forwarding her case to the U.S. Army.

Davis said the Kansas Guard answered by launching a commander's inquiry accusing her of failure to properly process paperwork.

Davis said a Kansas Guard member confided her promotion process might proceed unfettered if her complaints stopped. She declined to retreat. Davis was eventually promoted.

The Army's IG investigation of alleged retaliation against Davis dragged on for 4½ years, which made it one of the department's longest-running cases. The resulting 60-page report was a disappointment to Davis. It either concluded allegations were unfounded or left issues unresolved because of lack of information, she said.

In 2016, prior to conclusion of the Army IG inquiry, Davis met with Kansas Guard officers to discuss physical problems with her hips and back. Convalescent leave was an option. Instead, she was handed a packet containing a notice of intent to involuntarily release her from full-time duty. The recommendation was to provide an honorable characterization of her military service, despite an assertion she "failed to complete assigned tasks."

Removal from full-time National Guard duty for the first time since 2002 would have made it more difficult to earn retirement benefits available after 20 years of full-time service.

Davis said evidence relied upon to justify demotion to part-time status hinged on a distorted selection of emails and "unwarranted negative counseling statements" provided by Kansas Guard personnel, including some who should not have been involved in rating her job performance. She said stacking the deck with complicit evaluators was part of a Kansas Guard playbook to flush people out the service.

She turned to then-Congresswoman Lynn Jenkins, a Kansas Republican representing the 2nd District that includes Topeka. Davis sought help from Jenkins to speed completion of the U.S. Army inspector general's analysis of alleged retaliation against Davis by the Kansas Guard. Davis requested aid with retraction of the involuntary separation action or affirmation of due process rights while she challenged the action.

Davis presented herself to Jenkins as a "federal whistleblower with an ongoing inquiry into reprisal" involving members of the Kansas Guard.

"I frequently witnessed what I believed to be inappropriate conduct," Davis wrote in a document sent to Jenkins.

Davis said Jenkins' office took steps to intervene in her case, but nothing decisive came of that attempt by Kansas Guard officials to sever her full-time status.

The Kansas Guard issued an order in 2017 recalling Davis from remote duty to an office position in the organization's recruiting and retention command. By the end of that year, however, a medical board found Davis' chronic health condition rendered her unfit for duty. The Veterans Administration directed her not to return to work. That prompted a stalemate not resolved until her retirement in 2020.

'Toxic' culture

During the period from 2013 to 2015, a separate and much larger Kansas Guard investigation led by a one-star Air Guard general and an Army Guard lieutenant colonel produced compelling evidence of widespread malfeasance within the state's military organization. The roster of confirmed offenses attributed to officers and enlisted personnel of the Kansas Guard included acts of racism, enlistment fraud, bullying, sexual assault, retaliation and promotion manipulation.

The Kansas Guard investigating officers discovered confidential information gathered during their inquiry was leaked to people under scrutiny. The material was used to target individuals cooperating with the case, investigators reported.

The Topeka Capital-Journal reported in 2017 that Brig. Gen. Scott Dold before retiring filed a final report on leadership shortcomings that concluded Tafañelli, the adjutant general, was responsible for systemic leadership problems within his command. Dold wrote in the report Kansas Guard leaders needed to place “soldier and airmen welfare and organizational needs before personal careerism and self-promotion.”

“The predominant culture of this command has difficulty balancing legal, moral and ethical facets of decision making when addressing poor performance, toxic leadership and substantiated wrongdoing,” Dold said.

In a response to the Capital-Journal’s disclosures, Tafañelli said the way Kansas Guard members answered the call to duty during war, disaster and emergency shouldn’t be overshadowed by a handful of corrupt colleagues.

“There are a few that will choose to act in an inappropriate manner and bring discredit to themselves and their service,” he said.

Grab you, anywhere

Davis said she was tormented by what she perceived as indifference among some in the Kansas Guard to sexual harassment and assault. In her experience, she said, too many men in the Kansas Guard were complicit in creation of hostile work environments for women.

“It is not unusual for a female to be in there and they just walk up and grab you. Anywhere,” Davis said.

Davis said a former Kansas Guard battalion commander, who she viewed as a friend, sexually assaulted her three years ago. A Veterans Affairs employee who offered to help Davis maneuver through the VA benefit system exposed himself to her, she said.

During a helicopter training assignment early in her Kansas Guard career, she said, a military doctor inappropriately penetrated her during a routine exam. Davis said she was sexually assaulted at age 18 by three men. It was after she enlisted, but before basic training.

Weishaar, the Kansas Guard’s top officer and adjutant general, said sexual assault and sexual harassment were a menace to the military and society at large.

“When it happens – not if, because it does happen – we’re going to take care of the victim,” he said.

Jody Cope, the Kansas Guard’s equal employment manager, said no one should accept the stereotype that sexual harassment was rampant in the Kansas Guard. The Kansas Guard’s annual reports tracking formal complaints of sexual harassment showed six were submitted in 2015, six in 2016 and two in 2017. Comparable information for subsequent years wasn’t released by the Kansas Guard.

Cope said the Kansas Guard had success resolving workplace conflicts with mediation. If allegations in an administrative complaint submitted to the Kansas Guard were substantiated, she said, there could be consequences.

“We’ve seen a really great increase over the last couple years of taking administrative action to address those,” Cope said.

Michelle Ferrer, sexual assault response coordinator for the Kansas Guard, said her office offered confidentiality to employees reporting sexual misconduct. The exception to this rule was when a person was viewed as a danger to others or likely to engage in self-harm, she said. If an individual decided against pursuit of a formal complaint, she said, the paperwork could be shredded.

“That helps people to feel comfortable they can come talk to us,” Ferrer said.

Potential sex crimes are referred to local law enforcement agencies because the Kansas Guard doesn’t have authority to proceed, said Maj. Jacob McElwee, the Kansas Guard's judge advocate general.

Outcome of civilian criminal cases can influence military administrative actions involving Kansas Guard members. If the local prosecutor declined to file charges in a case, it's possible the National Guard Bureau's office of complex investigations could review allegations.

"Either way, we have an outside agency coming in and making sure that everything's being followed," McElwee said.

Weight of suicide

Davis said she could tick off names of Kansas Guard members who had taken their own life. She's felt overwhelmed by the thought that she tried but failed to help some of the deceased. She also is convinced not enough was being done to honor former Kansas Guard members who bring an end to their lives.

She recalled a poignant moment during a meeting in which Kansas Guard officers asked her if dismissing a specific soldier from the force would cause him to commit suicide. She said she advised there was substantial risk. The soldier was kicked out. His suicide followed, she said.

In the past 6½ years, Kansas Guard officials said, 19 members of the Air or Army Guard in Kansas committed suicide. An average of nearly three suicides occurred annually from 2015 to the present. Fifteen of those people were in the Army Guard, while four were in the Air Guard.

The Kansas Guard doesn't keep statistics on former Kansas Guard members who chose to commit suicide. Care and treatment of veterans with suicidal thoughts rests with the VA or private health professionals.

Terry Williams, an Air Guard colonel and the Kansas Guard's state chaplain, said the organization's training of people to recognize warning signs of trouble had improved in the past 15 years. Military chaplains have benefit of offering total confidentiality to people seeking assistance, he said. Statistics don't reveal the number of men and women saved through these interventions, he said.

"I've done eight or nine funerals for suicides," Williams said. "I've been at bedsides, gravesides, hospitals. My perspective encompasses all of that. I have a programmatic side, but it's very personal to me, too."

He recalled a January service with snow on the ground and a wind-chill index of 15 degrees below.

"I could hear the daughter cry above 'Taps,'" said Williams, who has been in the Kansas Guard for 24 years and deployed overseas twice, including in 2009 to Iraq.

Angie Gabel, the 190th Air Refueling Wing's director of psychological health, said she was a champion of ASIST, or Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training. Hundreds involved with the Kansas Guard have completed ASIST training to learn how to talk with people suspected of thinking about or planning suicide, she said.

Problems with personal relationships, money, job stress, legal issues or communication barriers are often indicators of a person in crisis, she said.

Gabel said a persistent challenge was overcoming a belief among soldiers and airmen that admitting to mental health challenges automatically destroyed careers.

"We still have that mentality of, 'If I say something my career is over, point blank, in the military.' We are slowly changing that mindset. It's not over. It's not a career-ender," Gabel said.

'Expendable'

Davis, 39, opposed her exit from the Kansas Guard last year because she thought it was unfair and meant she would never qualify for retirement benefits more generous than disability compensation. The end came without pomp and circumstance in April 2020.

Termination of the employee-employer relationship allowed her to speak more freely about the citizen-soldier organization's personnel issues. Many of those conversations were difficult for her. Others sparked a determination to keep fighting. She also shared a belief the mountain she was climbing could be too high, too far.

Davis said her forced exit was the consequence of her decisions to stare down the barrel of a Kansas Guard culture still anchored by a good-old-boy network. Reviewing threads of her Kansas Guard life suggests she was collateral damage of a toxic military environment, she said.

Administrative conflict that enveloped her felt like an organized effort to induce enough despair to drive her off, she said. The experience offered insight into factors contributing to the national plague of military suicide, she said.

"We're expendable," Davis said. "The decade has been really hard. The last five years has tried to kill me. It never had to be that way."

It was not the way her career was to have evolved when she enlisted as a teenager and joined a UH-60 Blackhawk crew in 1999. She was the daughter of a highly decorated Army officer. She had risen in rank while completing a degree in criminal justice at Washburn University in 2006 and a master's degree in business administration from Friends University in 2015.

She never deployed for combat despite volunteering to serve in hostile areas, but earned an Army commendation medal in 2010. She served more than a dozen years as a senior human resource officer in Kansas.

She said demise of her Army career failed to extinguish a conviction that military service provided rewarding experiences.

"I loved it. I loved the camaraderie. I loved taking care of soldiers. I loved learning new things," Davis said. "I liked being able to obtain the knowledge and ability to do things – write policy or figure things out and then go to the boss: 'OK, this is what you want. Here are your options.'?"

After months of evaluation, the VA rated Davis as 100% disabled. It was an analysis based primarily on diagnosis of her PTSD. Medical records indicated she suffered anxiety and depression in addition to physical limitations.

Fighting to get better

Not quite middle-aged, Davis' body and mind have been worn down. She has a new left hip. The plan to replace the right hip was postponed. Her right knee was operated on, but issues linger. She has dental woes from grinding her teeth.

Her future is clouded by realities of PTSD. Therapy was helpful at times and challenging in other moments, she said. Because of the pandemic, she unexpectedly discovered remote conversations with a therapist were easier than in-person discussions.

"I couldn't cry in front of her," Davis said. "I'd have my work face on. We weren't getting to the root of any problems."

Davis said her recovery had been impeded by reading or being told about ongoing controversy in the Kansas Guard. The intel reminded her there was no certainty about what her advocacy accomplished.

"I complained about people at the very top. Nobody wants to have anything to do with me," Davis said. "In retrospect, I went through a lot more than I realized at the time. I would like an apology."

6. NC: WXII (Regional) – National Guard member: Great strides have been made since US repealed ‘Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell’ – By Bill O’Neil

As the end of Pride Month nears, an openly gay member of the Army National Guard is speaking out, sharing that the U.S. military has made great strides in diversity in the decade since the repeal of “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell.”

Lt. Col. Jeff Roth said when he joined the Army 20 years ago, he lived a secret life out of necessity.

“I was in relationships – or dating people – (I) had to be very careful about who I was out to, where I was out, how I was, went out and about my daily life in public because that could have a consequence on my military career,” Roth said.

The now-defunct policy forced gay and lesbian members of the military to serve in silence.

When it ended in 2011, Roth said it was a non-event, and the fears that it would undermine military professionalism didn’t happen.

“I think what has changed is (that) I can be open and honest with my teammates,” Roth said. “I can be my authentic self, I can share who I am, and vice versa. That builds trust and confidence.”

Roth said about 13,000 gay and lesbian troops were forced out of the military under “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell.”

Since then, Roth said things have gotten better.

“As we move forward as a military, I think we can be very proud of our diversity, how we’re changing our culture to be more welcoming people and let the number of people the very small number of people who raise their hand to say, ‘I want to serve,’ need all of our support,” he said.

Roth said the biggest surprise for him came last year – he had the opportunity to attend a Pride luncheon on a military base while serving overseas.

“It was the first time I saw visible evidence of (a) complete shift in how we approach it,” he said.

Roth said the National Guard went further, sending out a letter in support of its LGBTQ members that noted celebrating pride and recognizing the contributions of LGBTQ to people who serve in the military.

Roth said it took him several years after the repeal of “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” before he came out – since he doesn’t believe it has had any effect on his military career.

7. OH: The Vindicator (Local) – National Guard prepares to end long mission at Second Harvest – By Ashely Fox

When Spc. Sam Schmucker of Cortland began his assignment with the Ohio National Guard at the Second Harvest Food Bank of the Mahoning Valley, he didn’t imagine it turning into such an opportunity.

Schmucker is one of several soldiers offered a position with the food bank, located in Youngstown.

“I didn’t have a job to go back to after orders,” Schmucker, 20, said.

He was approached by a member of the food bank’s management, who offered Schmucker a role pulling orders, preparing food for various agencies to pick up from the warehouse.

Schmucker is grateful for the opportunity to serve the Valley, but also for the door that opened up as a result of volunteering. “It does mean a lot. I just came here as a volunteer but was offered employment. It meant a lot,” he said.

Gratitude extends throughout the food bank and National Guard.

The soldiers played a crucial part to ensure people in not only the Mahoning Valley but across the state were able to have access to food, said Mike Iberis, executive director of the Second Harvest Food Bank of the Mahoning Valley.

On Monday, the volunteers were treated to a lunch from the food bank to thank them for their assistance during the pandemic.

As orders for the National Guard expire July 2, some of the volunteers will go back to school, while others go back to work, Warrant Officer candidate Adam Fullmer said.

“We’re going to be out of Task Force Fox. It’s standing down in about 60 days,” he said.

Task Force Fox encompasses the National Guard deployment around the state assisting agencies and organizations through the pandemic.

When the guard members were assigned to the food bank 15 months ago, 35 assisting. That number has shrunk to 15 now.

Last year was the “biggest” distribution year, Iberis said, with 15 million pounds of food handed out. This year, the food bank is on track to distribute 13 million pounds, Iberis said.

Most of the National Guard was activated for 30 days or more, Fullmer said. “We saw upwards of 75, 80 percent” of soldiers working extended assignments, ranging from food banks to helping in the prisons, to COVID-19 testing and vaccination sites.

The National Guard also helped during what Fullmer called the “unemployment crisis,” helping to process claims throughout the pandemic in Ohio.

“We took a little of the edge off for some of the organizations,” Fullmer said.

“This is an illustration of when people work together, what can happen,” Iberis said. “This was such a smooth-working relationship” among the guard, food bank and its agencies, Iberis said, calling it “a mammoth collaboration.”

The food bank, like some other places, is returning to a state of pre-pandemic normalcy. Last week, phone calls were made to the normal roster of volunteers with about 80 percent already back in the warehouse this week, Iberis said.

Throughout the National Guard’s help and media coverage, something positive happened with volunteers.

“The Mahoning Valley took note of how these Guards people responded. That has resulted ... in a barrage of new volunteer applications,” Iberis said. “It’s incredible.”

Thanks [REDACTED]. Not a lot of detail in the EMAC. To answer a question raised by [REDACTED], expectation is the state of South Dakota will be charged for all "unit" equipment per the list included on the EMAC. Individual equipment needed by Soldiers will be considered as part of their duty uniform and not reimbursable unless there is an actual loss/theft of these items. Many of these items are not listed on DoD's memo outlining costs for use by non-DoD agencies. As such, we will need to establish a reasonable cost basis for some of these items.

Good morning,

Starting an email string so we can track information each of us is working on regarding NG Support to TX.

The number of personnel supporting is in flux and will be depending on information still coming in from TX and what we actually send for equipment and how we travel, both personnel and equipment.

I know [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] talked this morning and we had a meeting here at Camp Rapid to de-conflict some information. Clarification on a few items still need to happen.

First item is whether or not to send the FLA's (the Army Field Litter Ambulances) and medics. It's either both, just medics, or neither. This will affect the roster and cost for transport of FLA's, maintenance, and daily rate in TX. Information we received from you is that TX only wanted the 11 HUMMV's. IT appears TX has medical contacts, sick call and those need health care at local facilities set up. COL [REDACTED] will touch base with TX on what we need for medical support.

Second, after our meeting here, we feel the best course of action for getting, at a minimum 11 HUMMV's and a quadcon (for equipment) to TX, would be a commercial line haul. Several advantages to this course of action is not needing our additional soldiers for sate active duty, needing lodging for these soldiers while in transport (and in Huron while loading), possibility of trucks breaking down along the way to TX, paying for fuel for the semi-trucks to TX, and needing the support personnel to follow. If OEM is willing to go this route, SDNG will get specs for equipment to work the haul contract, or can facilitate the estimate for contract to OEM.

Third, maintenance for our vehicles in TX. We talked about sending our maintenance soldiers and contact trucks for breakdowns. There may be a process in place in TX to complete maintenance. COL [REDACTED] verifying what is really needed. [REDACTED] discussion with TX for EMAC did not indicate we needed the maintenance soldiers and contact trucks, but SD will have to pay for parts needed in repairs.

Verify lodging in TX. Motel name, location, is TX paying or SD OEM contracting? [REDACTED] working this.

Charter busses. With the unavailability of airlift from TX, request two charter busses for 48 pax (number is as of writing this email). If possible, the charter busses have trailers behind to haul personal gear for soldiers. These trailers will replace the quadcon mentioned above.

OEM is provided fuel cards, 1 ea per vehicle. Can the fuel cards be used for maintenance items on the vehicle (oil, flat tires, headlights etc). What is the limit of the use of fuel cards or will there be a separate card for maintenance?

3 commercial flights on 7 July for LNO, supply SGT, (both 1 way) and myself (round trip couple days only for myself) to coordinate incoming soldiers and equipment.

JAG brief. COL [REDACTED] verifying SD brief.

Our tentative timeline is:

06 July 1200: soldiers report to Armory in Huron

Begin RSOI, complete inventories, admin paperwork, intel brief, individual equipment prep, etc

07 July: Load of equipment and prep to roll out

07 July: 3 pax commercial flight to TX to coordinate incoming SD pax and equipment

08 July: Personnel leave first thing in the morning via bus

What I am tracking as OEM working on:

Lodging in Huron - understood this is complete (block of rooms at Crossroads)

2 Charter buses

EMAC paperwork with TX

Determine when TX will be able to accept our soldiers

Lodging in TX

What SDNG needs to get OEM:

Updated personnel roster

Updated cost estimate for personnel and equipment

Good Morning [REDACTED],

My plan is to travel to the unit on the 6th of July to review and collect the SAD packets. Then I will travel to Pierre on the 7th of July to deliver all needed paperwork to you and OEM (hand delivered). At that time, if there is any adjustments or additional things needed we can take care of it during that time.

I know the end of the pay period is the 8th, so I'm not expecting them to be loaded that pay period. However, it would be nice to have a confirmation when they are loaded. I will brief the soldiers that they will not their first paycheck until August 2nd. Please let me know if that is accurate.

I can't thank you enough for the hard work you put in for our National Guard members.

Respectfully,

MSgt [REDACTED]

Subject: NG soldiers on SAD

Importance: High

The Governor is going to send about 45 soldiers to Texas to help with border security. They will go on State Active Duty on July 6th for 45 days. NG is still identifying soldiers and working that piece. Once we know the names, they will be shared with you. Sgt. [REDACTED] is collecting the paperwork you need for them once they are identified and report to the duty station in Huron on July 6th.

OVERVIEW

President Biden cited his constitutional authority to approve “retaliatory airstrikes against Iran-linked targets in Iraq and Syria” under Article II, adding that even Congressional members “who are reluctant to acknowledge that have acknowledged that is the case,” according to the Washington Post. In northeast Syria, hours after the U.S. airstrikes, multiple rockets targeted a facility housing U.S. troops near al-Omar oil field, but U.S.-led coalition in Iraq and Syria spokesperson Army Col. Wayne Marotto confirmed there were no casualties, the Washington Post reported. Also of note, NATO Resolute Support Commander Gen. Austin Miller told ABC News in an interview that the security situation in Afghanistan is “not good,” but the U.S. would try to “ensure that the security assistance that can continue does continue.”

TOP STORIES

1. Biden defends authority to launch airstrikes in Iraq and Syria

Washington Post Online, June 28 (1817) | Anne Gearan

President Biden said Monday that he acted within his constitutional authority to order what his administration calls retaliatory airstrikes against Iran-linked targets in Iraq and Syria, which came as the White House has backed efforts to rewrite congressional authorization for such actions.

2. U.S. forces come under fire after airstrikes against Iran-backed militias in Syria, Iraq

Washington Post, June 29 (0115), Pg. A9 | Louisa Loveluck, John Hudson and Alex Horton

U.S. forces said Monday that they came under rocket attack hours after they carried out airstrikes against Iran-backed militia targets in Syria and Iraq in what officials had described as an effort to deter mounting violence by anti-American groups.

3. An inside look at the U.S. troop withdrawal from Afghanistan

ABCNews.com (Exclusive), June 28 (1754) | Luis Martinez and Martha Raddatz

The top U.S. general directing the full withdrawal of all 2,500 American troops from Afghanistan acknowledged in an exclusive interview with ABC News chief Global Affairs correspondent Martha Raddatz that the security situation in the country is “not good” and that the Taliban’s push to seize parts of the country is “concerning.” Gen. Austin Scott Miller said he stands by his belief that there cannot be a military victor in Afghanistan, but he told Raddatz that as the Taliban continues with its military operations across the country, while also engaging in peace talks, “you’re starting to create conditions here that doesn’t -- won’t look good for Afghanistan in the future if there is a push for a military takeover” that could result in a civil war.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT

4. Top Pentagon Cyber Official Probed Amid Disclosure Concerns

Bloomberg News, June 29 (0200) / Tony Capaccio

The Pentagon official who has been overseeing its new cybersecurity initiative for defense contractors has been placed on leave in connection with a suspected unauthorized disclosure of classified information from a military intelligence agency, according to an official document.

COVID-19

5. Perna Retiring From Covid Task Force as U.S. Response Shifts

Bloomberg News, June 28 (1549) / Riley Griffin and Josh Wingrove

U.S. Army General Gustave Perna, a top official in the Covid-19 vaccine rollout in both the Trump and Biden administrations, is set to retire July 2. Robert Johnson, an official at the Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Authority, will serve as interim chief operating officer for the pandemic effort, according to Jeffrey Zients, President Joe Biden's Covid-19 coordinator.

EXECUTIVE/LEGISLATIVE

6. New Middle East airstrikes inflame Democratic war powers debate

Politico Online, June 28 (1331) / Andrew Desiderio and Lara Seligman

President Joe Biden's weekend airstrikes against Iran-backed militias in Iraq and Syria are rankling Democrats frustrated by his decision to sidestep Congress — a dynamic that promises to fuel the party's long-running push to rein in presidential war powers. But some in Biden's party are sounding the alarm about possible abuses of that power, which presidents of both parties have employed to circumvent Congress and legally justify various military operations. The airstrikes come as lawmakers are already working to repeal the two-decade-old authorizations for the use of military force in Iraq, an effort that Biden supports.

7. Assault victims demand military justice

Los Angeles Times, June 29 (0300) / David S. Cloud

Among other shortcomings in the system, critics say, victims are too often doubted or pressured not to bring formal charges, even more than in the civilian world. Senior officers who have responsibility for prosecuting offenders too often side with the accused, rather than the victim. Some victims find their lives destroyed while some perpetrators face little or no punishment. And many assaults go unreported, according to reports even from within the military. Now, a push in Congress to overhaul military prosecution procedures -- started by Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.) nearly a decade ago -- is finally gaining traction after years of opposition from the Pentagon and its supporters in Congress.
