

No. 18-5116

---

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

---

CITIZENS FOR RESPONSIBILITY AND ETHICS IN WASHINGTON,

Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

Defendant-Appellee.

---

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia
Case No. 1:17-cv-00432-JEB

---

PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC

---

Anne L. Weismann
Counsel of Record
Adam J. Rappaport
Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics
in Washington
1101 K Street, N.W., Suite 201
Washington, D.C. 20005
Telephone: (202) 408-5565

Alan B. Morrison
2000 H Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20052
Telephone: (202) 994-7120

Counsel for Petitioner

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ..... ii

STATEMENT REGARDING NECESSITY OF EN BANC REHEARING ..... 1

BACKGROUND ..... 3

REASONS FOR GRANTING REHEARING EN BANC ..... 7

    I. The Panel’s Decision Renders a Key Provision of the FOIA Functionally
    Inoperative..... 7

    II. The Panel’s Decision Conflicts With Supreme Court and Circuit
    Precedent..... 13

CONCLUSION ..... 16

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE ..... 18

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE ..... 19

ADDENDUM ..... 20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Campaign for Accountability v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice , 278 F. Supp. 3d 303 (D.D.C. 2017).....	9
Citizens for Responsibility &amp; Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice , 846 F.3d 1235 (D.C. Cir. 2017).....	1, 4
Citizens for Responsibility &amp; Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice , 922 F.3d 480 (D.C. Cir. 2019).....	passim
Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep’t of Energy , 617 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1980).....	1, 9, 14
Electronic Frontier Found. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice , 739 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014)....	3
Massachusetts v. Westcott , 431 U.S. 322 (1977).....	12
National Labor Relations Bd. v. Sears, Roebuck &amp; Co. , 421 U.S. 132 (1975)....	1, 15
Tax Analysts v. IRS , 117 F.3d 607 (D.C. Cir. 1997).....	14
U.S. Dep’t of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press , 489 U.S. 749 (1989).....	9, 13
U.S. Dep’t of Justice v. Tax Analysts , 492 U.S. 135 (1989).....	13
Vaughn v. Rosen , 484 F.2d 820 (D.C. Cir. 1973).....	11

Statutes

5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2).....	passim
5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2)(C) .....	8
5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3).....	2, 8, 11
5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B) .....	11

Legislative Materials

H. Rep. No. 89-1497 (1966) .....	8
S. Rep. No. 813, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. (1965) .....	13

Rules

Fed. R. App. P. 35(a) .....	3
Fed. R. App. P. 35(b) .....	2
Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).....	11
Fed. R. Evid. 201 .....	12

STATEMENT REGARDING NECESSITY OF EN BANC REHEARING

Rehearing en banc of the panel decision in this case is necessary to correct a decision that eviscerates a key provision of the Freedom of Information Act (“FOIA”), 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2). If left uncorrected, it will leave the public without access to the body of secret law the Defendant Office of Legal Counsel (“OLC”) creates and that provides controlling legal interpretations to executive branch officials. The panel decision also conflicts with prior decisions of this Court and the Supreme Court. See National Labor Relations Bd. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132 (1975) (“Sears”); Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep’t of Energy, 617 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

With a stroke of the pen, OLC can insulate a president from criminal prosecution<sup>1</sup> or deprive the Food and Drug Administration of jurisdiction to regulate drugs used to effectuate capital punishment.<sup>2</sup> OLC opinions resolve “some of the weightiest matters in our public life”,<sup>3</sup> effectively functioning as the court of last resort for agencies seeking definitive decisions on what the law means. As

---

<sup>1</sup> Randolph D. Moss, Memorandum Opinion for the Attorney General, A Sitting President’s Amenability to Indictment and Criminal Prosecution, Oct. 16, 2000.

<sup>2</sup> Steven A. Engel, Memorandum Opinion for the Attorney General, Whether the Food and Drug Administration Has Jurisdiction over Articles Intended for Use in Lawful Executions, May 3, 2019.

<sup>3</sup> Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 922 F.3d 480, 483 (D.C. Cir. 2019) (“CREW II”), quoting Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 846 F.3d 1235, 1238 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (“CREW I”).

such, OLC opinions are precisely the kind of “law” that the reading room provision of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2), requires agencies to proactively make publicly available.

Nevertheless, this Court, in a two-to-one decision, ruled that Plaintiff’s suit to force compliance by Defendant U.S. Department of Justice (“DOJ”) with these disclosure obligations cannot proceed. Rehearing en banc of that decision is warranted because the majority has rendered the affirmative disclosure requirement of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2) a nullity as applied to the formal opinions of OLC. Although the majority stated it was basing its decision on pleading requirements and choices Plaintiff made in framing its complaint, the practical effect of its decision is to limit any member of the public seeking OLC opinions to the FOIA’s “reactive” provision, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3), under which requesters may only bring a claim that OLC has wrongfully denied a specifically requested OLC opinion. Even that remedy is largely illusory because OLC has no publicly available index of its opinions, and there is no other means by which the public can learn the subjects its opinions cover. By limiting OLC’s FOIA obligations to responding only to specific requests for specific opinions, the majority has made the continuing, affirmative disclosure requirements of section 552(a)(2) functionally inoperative. En banc rehearing is therefore justified because this case “involves a question of exceptional importance.” Fed. R. App. P. 35(b).

Finally, the majority's overreliance on and unduly broad reading of Electronic Frontier Found. v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 739 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014) ("EFF"), conflicts with a line of Supreme Court and D.C. Circuit precedent recognizing the existence of legal opinions from agencies such as the National Labor Relations Board, the Department of Energy, and the Internal Revenue Service that, as "working law," fall within the reading room disclosure provision. Had those cases followed the approach of the majority, their outcomes would have been different, and that inconsistency and conflict with precedent provide a further reason for why en banc rehearing is required. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a).

BACKGROUND

Since the 1946 enactment of the Administrative Procedure Act, Congress has required all federal agencies to publish in the Federal Register or otherwise make publicly available specified categories of records even without a request to do so. That requirement currently is codified in the so-called "reading room provision" of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2). It mandates that every agency proactively make publicly available without request "(A) final opinions . . . made in the adjudication of cases" and "(B) those statements of policy and interpretations which have been adopted by the agency and are not published in the Federal Register." As to those two categories, this provision also requires agencies to make publicly available without request "current indexes providing identifying information for the public as to any matter issued, adopted, or promulgated after July 4, 1967[.]” 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2) (final paragraph E).

OLC is a component of DOJ that performs functions dating back to the Judiciary Act of 1789, making it “nearly as old as the Republic itself.” CREW I, 846 F.3d at 1238. OLC describes its core function as providing “controlling” legal interpretations to executive branch officials on questions of law that are centrally important to the functioning of the federal government. Joint Appendix (“JA”) 17. This Court has described OLC as “[f]or decades . . . the most significant and centralized source of legal advice in the Executive Branch.” CREW I, 846 F.3d at 1238. Among its opinions, OLC maintains a category of opinions it refers to as “formal,” which are prepared pursuant to a detailed process, JA 18, and which, once issued, are likely to effectively be the final word within the executive branch on controlling law. JA 17.

CREW has repeatedly and unsuccessfully sought access to OLC opinions through individual FOIA requests for specific categories of OLC opinions and broader requests for all formal written opinions and indices of those opinions. JA 6 ¶ 7. By letter dated February 3, 2017, CREW also requested that OLC comply with its reading room obligations by providing CREW with copies of all formal written opinions OLC has issued, all additional formal written opinions formalized in the future, and all existing indices of OLC’s formal written opinions. JA 25.

When OLC did not grant CREW's requests, CREW filed a complaint for injunctive and declaratory relief challenging Defendant's failure to comply with its proactive disclosure requirements under 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2) by making available to CREW the formal written opinions OLC has issued and current indices of those opinions. CREW pointed to a July 16, 2010 memo from then-Acting Assistant Attorney General David J. Barron to OLC attorneys, Best Practices for OLC Legal Advice and Written Opinions ("Best Practices Memo"), JA 17-22, as describing the kind of formal, written opinions CREW seeks. DOJ moved to dismiss the complaint based on its mischaracterization of CREW's complaint as demanding that all formal written opinions be produced, despite CREW's express request for only those OLC opinions that have been formalized and finalized (and therefore not overturned by either the Attorney General or the President). JA 5, ¶ 2; JA 11 ¶ 27.

The District Court granted DOJ's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The Court characterized CREW's claim as an all or nothing proposition and concluded that EFF "dooms CREW's complaint," because that decision demonstrates that at least one formal OLC opinion is subject to withholding under FOIA Exemption 5. JA 28. The Court imposed on CREW the burden to identify "some specific subset of OLC's formal, written opinions [that] are being unlawfully withheld." JA 29.

In a divided decision the panel affirmed the District Court. Relying on EFF, the panel held that CREW had failed to meet its pleading burden of “plausibly alleg[ing] that the OLC’s formal written opinions have all been adopted by the agencies to which they were addressed[.]” CREW II, 922 F.3d at 486 (emphasis added). The panel applied the same pleading standard for CREW’s claims as that applied “in assessing claims brought under FOIA’s reactive provision.” Id. at 487. Further, the panel refused to consider publicly available OLC formal written opinions as evidence supporting CREW’s claim because they were not identified expressly in the complaint. Id. at 488. The panel rejected CREW’s claim that it could not fairly meet the burden of proof the District Court imposed, characterizing CREW’s claim of injury as “self-inflicted” because CREW had declined to either amend its complaint or rely instead on the FOIA’s reactive provision as the sole mechanism for accessing formal OLC opinions. Id. at 489.

Judge Pillard dissented. CREW II, 922 F.3d at 490. She would have reversed the District Court’s judgment that CREW’s complaint did not “allege[] enough to survive a motion to dismiss.” Id. Judge Pillard identified facts CREW pleaded in its complaint that “sufficiently . . . posed the legal question to the district court” of whether “at least some OLC opinions fall within FOIA’s reading-room provision[.]” Id. In support of her position she cited (1) OLC’s Best Practices Memo and its own website, id. at 490-91; (2) allegations in the complaint about OLC’s role of providing “legal advice that is ‘authoritative’ and ‘binding by custom and practice in the executive branch,’” 922 F.3d at 491 (quoting Compl. ¶¶ 18-19, 27); and (3) publicly available OLC opinions that CREW identified “[b]y way of illustration,” id. 491. Judge Pillard further reasoned that “[b]y requiring more detail from CREW at this stage, the court effectively forces CREW to anticipate and plead around any FOIA-exemption defense the government might raise,” which she found to conflict with CREW’s burden at the Rule 12(b)(6) stage of “plausibly pleading that at least some OLC opinions are ‘working law’ and therefore covered by the reading-room provision.” Id. at 492. Judge Pillard took issue with the majority’s characterization of the pleading obstacles as “self-inflicted,” reasoning, “[s]hunting plaintiff down a different statutory path that requires it to request particular documents is no answer to its claim for reading-room access to electronic versions of Section 552(a)(2) documents without any FOIA request.” Id. at 493.

REASONS FOR GRANTING REHEARING *EN BANC

I. The Panel’s Decision Renders a Key Provision of the FOIA Functionally Inoperative.

Through the reading room provision Congress provided a mechanism to make public the “thousands of orders, opinions, statements, and instructions issued by hundreds of agencies, which the legislators characterized as a “form of case law” developed by “the bureaucracy[.]” H. Rep. No. 89-1497, at 28 (1966). The legislators sought to remedy the problem caused by the body of “Federal agency decisions [that] have been kept secret from the members of the public affected by the decisions,” id., through a provision of the FOIA that places on all agencies the proactive responsibility to identify and made publicly available those final opinions that have the “force and effect of law,” id., without the need for a request by the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2). This provision stands in stark contrast to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3), which imposes only a reactive disclosure obligation on agencies that is triggered by an individual request for specifically identified agency records.

In affirming the District Court’s dismissal, the majority couched its decision in terms of the adequacy of the pleading in CREW’s complaint. Its decision, however, effectively obliterated the distinction between the reactive and proactive provisions of the FOIA, rendering the reading room provision functionally inoperative for all requesters, at least as to OLC opinions. Indeed, the panel’s reasoning also would render other parts of the reading room provision equally inoperative, such as the requirement that agencies proactively make publicly available “administrative staff manuals and instructions to staff that affect a member of the public[.]” 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2)(C).

The panel posited two options for CREW: (1) accepting “the district court’s invitation to amend its complaint” as the plaintiff did in Campaign for Accountability v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 278 F. Supp. 3d 303 (D.D.C. 2017), CREW II, 922 F.3d at 489; or (2) making an individual FOIA request for particular OLC opinions, which it suggested was the preferred, if not only path of access for CREW. Id. The first option is illusory at best; as Judge Pillard pointed out in her dissent, the amended complaint the plaintiff filed in Campaign for Accountability “is not materially different from the claim CREW’s complaint advances[.]” Id. at 493. Moreover, the government moved to dismiss the amended complaint in that case “arguing that neither OLC’s binding opinions generally nor the subcategories the plaintiff identified in its amended complaint are subject to publication under the reading-room provision.” Id.

The second option, while potentially more viable, fails to appreciate the key differences between the FOIA’s proactive and reactive provisions. Contrary to the understanding of the panel, the proactive reading room provision is more than merely an alternate route to accessing OLC opinions – it is the mechanism Congress created to eliminate secret law. See, e.g., U.S. Dep’t of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 772 n.20 (1989) (the FOIA’s “primary objective is the elimination of ‘secret law’”) (citation omitted); Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 868 (“binding agency opinions and interpretations” are “the law itself” that “should be made available to the public . . . to prevent the development of secret law.” (quotation and citation omitted)). As Judge Pillard recognized, “[t]he point of the reading-room provision, after all, is to put the burden on agencies to make their ‘working law’ readily available, without request, to anyone who might want to read it.” CREW II, 922 F.3d at 493.

Moreover, without access to indexes of OLC’s opinions or any other means by which to ascertain the subjects OLC opinions cover, CREW has no meaningful opportunity to access OLC opinions through section 552(a)(3).

By couching its decision in terms of the pleading choices CREW made in framing its complaint and relying on only selective quotes from CREW’s complaint, the majority was able to ignore the effects of its flawed reasoning, which eviscerates the statute itself. As a result, CREW (and the public) are denied access to even those OLC opinions that constitute the “working law” of an agency and fall within the FOIA’s proactive disclosure provision. While DOJ has claimed “that none of the OLC’s formal written opinions constitutes the ‘working law’ of an agency subject to disclosure under FOIA’s reading-room provision,” the majority made clear its skepticism with this claim. CREW II, 922 F.3d at 487 n.2. Nevertheless, the fact that OLC produces at least some formal opinions subject to the reading room provision did not dissuade the majority from closing off to CREW the proactive reading room provision.

The irony here is that had Plaintiff instead requested a group of specific records under the reactive provision of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3), the course advocated by the majority opinion, CREW II, 922 F.3d at 489, CREW would have obtained all non-exempt portions of the requested OLC opinions because of the FOIA's requirement that agencies segregate and produce non-exempt material. But under the majority's rule, Plaintiff is entitled to no records whatsoever under section 552(a)(2), even those DOJ would have to disclose if sought directly under section 552(a)(3).

Further, contrary to the conclusion of the majority, the pleading requirements of Rule 12(b)(6) do not compel this approach. The panel found CREW had not met its burden of alleging "that the OLC's formal written opinions have all been adopted by the agencies to which they were addressed[.]" Id. at 486 (emphasis added). This was incorrect. By placing on CREW the burden to identify the specific OLC opinions that fall within the category of records subject to the reading room provision, the panel disregarded the express statutory command that in FOIA cases, the government bears that burden. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). This burden shifting reflects the asymmetrical relationship between a FOIA requester, who lacks knowledge of what responsive documents the agency possesses, and the agency that created them. See Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820, 823 (D.C. Cir. 1973). That asymmetry is even more pronounced here where Plaintiff seeks a body of OLC opinions that the agency has never even acknowledged exist.

In any event, as Judge Pillard outlined, CREW more than adequately met its pleading requirements by referencing descriptions, “often in OLC’s own words,” of “the authoritative nature of [OLC’s] opinions.” CREW II, 922 F.3d at 490. These include statements in the Best Practices Memo and OLC’s website, “both of which are . . . referenced and quoted in CREW’s complaint.” Id. CREW’s complaint also spells out how OLC “renders ‘interpretations which have been adopted by the agency’ within the meaning of Section 552(a)(2).” Id. at 491. And CREW pointed to publicly available OLC opinions – which the panel refused to consider because they were not specifically identified in its complaint, id. at 488 – as evidence that OLC produces opinions subject to the reading room provision.<sup>4</sup>

By deeming this evidence insufficient, the panel put CREW in the impossible position of “anticipat[ing] and plead[ing] around any FOIA-exemption defense the government might raise,” CREW II, 922 F.3d at 492. This runs directly <sup>4</sup> The dissent correctly pointed out that “it was not necessary for CREW to cite [one of OLC’s published opinions] in its complaint for it to exemplify a category of OLC opinions that the complaint plausibly pleads must be published electronically under FOIA’s reading-room provision.” Id. at 492. The OLC opinions on which CREW relied are in the public domain through OLC’s website and their inclusion “in OLC’s hardcover bound volumes.” JA 21. As such, they are subject to judicial notice under Fed. R. Evid. 201. See, e.g., Massachusetts v. Westcott, 431 U.S. 322, 323 n.2 (1977) (records of Coast Guard’s Merchant Vessel Documentation Division “may be judicially noticed”).

---

counter to the burden the FOIA places “on the agency to sustain its action,” Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. at 755 (quotation omitted), as “the only party able to explain it,” U.S. Dep’t of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 135, 143 n.3 (1989), quoting S. Rep. No. 813, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 8 (1965). Accordingly, because of the impact of the panel decision, which effectively eviscerates the reading room provision by removing an avenue for public access to OLC’s formal opinions that provide the “working law” covered by section 552(a)(2), the Court should rehear this case en banc.

II. The Panel’s Decision Conflicts With Supreme Court and Circuit Precedent.

The panel’s decision also warrants rehearing en banc because it places undue reliance on EFF in a manner that conflicts with Supreme Court and Circuit precedent. The majority construed EFF – which was brought under section 552(a)(3), not the reading room provision – as establishing “the broader rule that the OLC’s formal written opinions are not the ‘working law’ of an agency simply because they are nominally ‘controlling.’” CREW II, 922 F.3d at 488-9. Instead, according to the majority, OLC opinions fall within the reading room provision “only if the agency has ‘adopted’ the opinion as its own.” Id. at 486 (citation omitted). As Judge Pillard aptly put it, “the majority makes too much soup from one oyster.” Id. at 492. While EFF proves the existence of “a subcategory of opinions . . . that need not be disclosed under the reading-room provision,” this fact does not provide a “basis upon which to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim” given the lack of certainty, or even any allegation by the government, “that every one of the Office’s opinions would be shielded from disclosure for the reasons that were dispositive in EFF.” Id.

Prior precedent exposes the fallacy of the panel’s approach of relying on the facts of just one case to decide whether a whole range of documents are “working law” that must be disclosed. For example, in Coastal States, this Court concluded that certain legal memoranda prepared by the regional counsel that provided advice and interpretations of regulations to auditors constituted “agency law” that must be disclosed even though the agency characterized the memoranda as “not ‘formal’” and “not ‘binding’ on the audit staff[.]” 617 F.2d at 859. The Coastal States Court reasoned that “whatever the formal powers of regional counsel to issue binding interpretations of the regulations, in practice [the memoranda] represent interpretations of established policy on which the agency relies in discharging its regulatory responsibilities[.]” Id. at 870 (emphasis added). See also Tax Analysts v. IRS, 117 F.3d 607, 609 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (IRS Field Service Advice Memoranda held to be “agency law” that must be disclosed, even though they were “not formally binding,” because they were “generally followed”).

The lesson from Coastal States is that for “working law” purposes documents must be evaluated within the specific context in which they were created and not pursuant to a universal “adoption” rule. That conclusion flows logically from the Supreme Court’s decision in Sears. There, the Court described the reading room provision in broad brush terms, not tethered to a narrow “adoption” standard, when it explained that the provision “calls for disclosure of all opinions and interpretations which embody the agency’s effective law and policy,” meaning those that have “the force and effect of law.” 421 U.S. at 153. Applying that standard to legal memoranda claimed to be exempt in their entirety, the Court concluded, most significantly for this case, that some were exempt and others not, based on their function in the adjudicative process, not on their labels.

In addition, by OLC’s own description, the opinions sought here constitute a uniform system with precedential effect. The Best Practices Memo, for example, directs the office to “consider and ordinarily give great weight to any relevant past opinions of Attorneys General and the Office,” and cautions against “lightly depart[ing] from such past decisions[.]” JA 18. It also recognizes that its opinions may “constrain the Administration’s or an agency’s pursuit of desired practices or policy objectives,” and “may effectively be the final word on the controlling law.” JA 17. It is hard to imagine records more clearly within the affirmative disclosure requirements as working law under section 552(a)(2).

Had the Sears Court followed the panel’s approach, it would not have ventured beyond the single question of whether the memoranda had been adopted by an agency. Similarly, presented with the facts in Coastal States, the panel here likely would have concluded the memoranda were not adopted by the agency itself and therefore not subject to disclosure. In both instances, the panel would have been wrong. Here, too, applying an across-the-board test produced an incorrect result in tension with Supreme Court and Circuit precedent because it looked at only one factor and ignored the attributes the requested OLC opinions share with the legal memoranda found to constitute working law – attributes Plaintiff detailed in its briefs before this Court.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, CREW respectfully requests rehearing en banc.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Anne L. Weisman

Anne L. Weismann
(D.C. Bar No. 298190)

Adam J. Rappaport
(D.C. Bar No. 479866)

Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics
in Washington

1101 K Street, N.W., Suite 201

Washington, D.C. 20005

Telephone: (202) 408-5565

aweismann@citizensforethics.org

Alan B. Morrison

(D.C. Bar No. 073114)

2000 H Street, N.W.

Washington, D.C. 20052

Dated: June 10, 2019

Telephone: (202) 994-7120
aborrison@law.gwu.edu

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on June 10, 2019, I electronically filed the foregoing document with the Clerk of Court for the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit by using the appellate CM/ECF system, thereby serving all persons required to be served.

/s/ Anne L. Weismann
Counsel for Appellant

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE

1. This document complies with the type-volume limitation of Fed. R. App. P. 35(b)(2)(A) because excluding the parts of the documents exempted by Fed. R. App. P. 32(f) and Circuit Rule 32(e)(1):

this document contains 3765 words, or this brief uses a monospaced typeface and contains [state the number of] lines of text.

2. This document complies with the typeface requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(5) and the type-style requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(6) because:

this document has been prepared in a proportionally spaced typeface using Microsoft Word 2016 in 14 pt Times New Roman; or this document has been prepared in a monospaced typeface using [state name and version of word-processing program].

Dated: June 10, 2019

/s/ Anne L. Weismann
Counsel for Appellant

ADDENDUM

1. Certificate as to Parties, rulings, Related Cases and Amici
2. Corporate Disclosure Statement
3. Panel Decision

CERTIFICATE AS TO PARTIES, RULINGS, AND RELATED CASES

Pursuant to D.C. Circuit Rule 35(c), Petitioner Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington hereby certifies as follows:

A. Parties and Amici. Petitioner is Appellant Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, a non-profit corporation. Defendant-Appellee is the United States Department of Justice. There were no amici curiae in the District Court. The Knight First Amendment Institute at Columbia University appeared as amici curia before this Court.

B. Ruling Under Review. Petitioner sought review by the panel of the Decision and Order of Judge Trevor N. McFadden, ECF Dkt. Nos. 24, 25, in Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, No. 17-cv-04432 (TNM) (Hon. Trevor N. McFadden). The district court's opinion is available at 298 F. Supp. 3d 151 and is reprinted in the Joint Appendix at 23-31. The panel's Opinion is attached to this Petition. This Petition for Rehearing En Banc seeks review of the panel's decision.

C. Related Cases. The case on review has not previously been before this Court, although a prior case between the same parties concerning the same requested documents previously was before this Court, Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, No. 16-5110. Counsel is aware of one related case currently pending before the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Campaign for Accountability v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, Civil No. 16-cv-1068 (KBJ).

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Pursuant to D.C. Circuit Rule 35(c), Petitioner Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (“CREW”) submits its corporate disclosure statement.

(a) CREW has no parent company, and no publicly-held company has a ten percent or greater ownership interest in CREW.

(B) CREW is a non-profit, non-partisan corporation organized under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. Through a combined approach of research, advocacy, public education, and litigation, CREW seeks to protect the rights of citizens to be informed about the activities of government officials and to ensure the integrity of those officials. Among its principle activities, CREW routinely requests information from government agencies under the Freedom of Information Act (“FOIA”) and pursues its rights to information under the FOIA through litigation. CREW disseminates to the public, through its website and other media, documents it receives and information it learns based in part on those documents and information obtained through other administrative processes.

United States Court of Appeals
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

---

Argued December 4, 2018

Decided April 30, 2019

No. 18-5116

CITIZENS FOR RESPONSIBILITY AND ETHICS IN WASHINGTON,
APPELLANT

v.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
APPELLEE

---

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia
(No. 1:17-cv-00432)

---

Anne L. Weismann argued the cause for the appellant. Alan B. Morrison and Adam J. Rappaport were with her on brief. Stuart McPhail entered an appearance.

Alex Abdo and Jameel Jaffer were on brief for the amici curiae The Knight First Amendment Institute at Columbia University, et al. in support of the appellant.

Brad Hinschelwood, Attorney, United States Department of Justice, argued the cause for the appellee. Michael S. Raab, Attorney, was with him on brief.

Before: HENDERSON and PILLARD, Circuit Judges, and GINSBURG, Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion for the Court filed by Circuit Judge HENDERSON.

Dissenting opinion filed by Circuit Judge PILLARD.

KAREN LECRAFT HENDERSON, Circuit Judge: Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW), a non-profit advocacy group, seeks to compel the United States Department of Justice’s Office of Legal Counsel to make available all of its formal written opinions, as well as indices of those opinions, under the so-called “reading-room” provision of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2). The district court dismissed CREW’s complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, largely based on this Court’s decision in Electronic Frontier Foundation v. United States Department of Justice (EFF), 739 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014). Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 298 F. Supp. 3d 151, 155–56 (D.D.C. 2018). We agree and therefore affirm.

I. BACKGROUND

The authority of the Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) is “nearly as old as the Republic itself.” Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice (CREW I), 846 F.3d 1235, 1238 (D.C. Cir. 2017). Since the Judiciary Act of 1789, the United States Attorney General has had the authority “to give his advice and opinion upon questions of law when required by the President of the United States, or when requested by the heads of any of the departments, touching any matters that may concern their departments.” Judiciary Act of 1789, § 35, 1 Stat. 73, 93 (codified as amended at 28 U.S.C. §§ 511–513). The Attorney General has since delegated much of his authority to the OLC. See 28 C.F.R. § 0.25. The OLC’s responsibilities currently include “[p]reparing the formal opinions of the Attorney General; rendering informal opinions and legal advice to the various agencies of the Government; and assisting the Attorney General in the performance of his functions as legal adviser to the President.” Id. § 0.25(a). Over the years, the OLC has opined on “some of the weightiest matters in our public life: from the [P]resident’s authority to direct the use of military force without congressional approval, to the standards governing military interrogation of ‘alien unlawful combatants,’ to the [P]resident’s power to institute a blockade of Cuba.” CREWI, 846 F.3d at 1238.

Although the OLC frequently conveys its legal advice to executive agencies through informal means, it sometimes does so through “formal written opinions.” See Memorandum from David J. Barron, Acting Assistant Attorney Gen., to Attorneys of the Office of Legal Counsel, Best Practices for OLC Legal Advice and Written Opinions 1–2 (July 16, 2010) (hereinafter Best Practices Memo). Formal written opinions “take the form of signed memoranda, issued to an Executive Branch official who has requested the [OLC]’s opinion.” Id. at 2. The OLC considers its formal written opinions to be “one particularly important form of controlling legal advice.” Id. at 1. Indeed, a former head of the OLC has described its formal written opinions and informal advice as “authoritative” and “binding by custom and practice in the executive branch.” Josh Gerstein, Official: FOIA Worries Dampen Requests for Formal Legal Opinions, Politico: Under the Radar (Nov. 5, 2015), <https://www.politico.com/blogs/under-the-radar/2015/11/official-foia-worries-dampen-requests-for-formal-legal-opinions-215567>.

The OLC publishes some, but not all, of its formal written opinions. See Best Practices Memo 5. In deciding whether to publish a formal written opinion, the OLC considers “the potential importance of the opinion to other agencies or officials in the Executive Branch; the likelihood that similar questions may arise in the future; the historical importance of the opinion or the context in which it arose; and the potential significance of the opinion to the [OLC]’s overall jurisprudence.” Id. “In applying these factors, the [OLC] operates from the presumption that it should make its significant opinions fully and promptly available to the public.” Id. The OLC then weighs those factors against “countervailing considerations” such as whether publication “would reveal classified or other sensitive information relating to national security[,] . . . would interfere with federal law enforcement efforts or is prohibited by law.” Id. Additionally, the OLC “decline[s] to publish opinions when doing so is necessary to preserve internal Executive Branch deliberative processes or protect the confidentiality of information covered by the attorney-client relationship between OLC and other executive offices.” Id. at 5–6.

Invoking FOIA, CREW seeks to compel disclosure of the OLC’s unpublished formal written opinions. Importantly, CREW does not rely on FOIA’s “most familiar provision”—§ 552(a)(3)—by making a specific request for documents. CREW I, 846 F.3d at 1240. Instead, CREW relies upon FOIA’s reading-room provision, § 552(a)(2). Unlike its more commonly invoked neighbor—which imposes a “reactive” duty on agencies, CREW I, 846 F.3d at 1240—the reading-room provision affirmatively obligates agencies to “make available for public inspection” several categories of documents even absent a specific request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2); see CREW I, 846 F.3d at 1240. As relevant here, the categories include (1) “final opinions, including concurring and dissenting opinions, as well as orders, made in the adjudication of cases,” (2) “those statements of policy and interpretations which have been adopted by the agency and are not published in the Federal Register” and (3) “current indexes providing identifying information . . . as to any matter . . . required by this paragraph to be made available or published.” Id. § 552(a)(2).

In July 2013, CREW urged the OLC to make available all of its formal written opinions and indices of those opinions. After the OLC declined, CREW sued the Department of Justice to compel disclosure under FOIA’s reading-room provision. See CREW I, 846 F.3d at 1240. The district court dismissed the complaint because CREW improperly brought its claim under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 704, instead of FOIA’s judicial-review provision, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 164 F. Supp. 3d 145, 151–56 (D.D.C. 2016). We affirmed the dismissal. CREW I, 846 F.3d at 1246.

While CREW I was pending, we also decided EFF. 739 F.3d 1. In EFF, we addressed a claim brought under FOIA’s “reactive” provision seeking disclosure of a formal written opinion the OLC had sent to the FBI. Id. at 4–6. The court held that the opinion was exempt from disclosure by the deliberative process privilege. Id. at 9–10. As relevant here, it determined that, notwithstanding the opinion at issue bore some “indicia of a binding legal decision”—namely, that it was “controlling (insofar as agencies customarily follow OLC advice that they request), precedential, and can be withdrawn”—it did not constitute the FBI’s “working law” because the OLC “does not speak with authority on the FBI’s policy.” Id. at 9. Instead, the court concluded, the OLC opinion was “precisely the sort of ‘advisory opinion . . . comprising part of a process by which governmental decisions and policies are formulated’ that is covered by the deliberative process privilege.” Id. at 10 (alteration in original) (quoting Pub. Citizen, Inc. v. Office of Mgmt. & Budget, 598 F.3d 865, 875 (D.C. Cir. 2010)).

Following our decisions in EFF and CREW I, CREW sent a letter to the OLC in February 2017 renewing its request that the OLC disclose all of its formal written opinions and accompanying indices under FOIA’s reading-room provision. The OLC did not respond to the renewed request, prompting CREW to sue again, this time under FOIA’s judicial-review provision, § 552(a)(4)(B).

The district court dismissed CREW’s new complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Wash., 298 F. Supp. 3d at 156. It observed that CREW’s complaint “is premised on a universal claim” for all of the OLC’s formal written opinions and corresponding indices. Id. at 154. “Accordingly,” the court reasoned, “if the [Department of Justice] can identify any formal written opinions that are not subject to FOIA disclosure, CREW’s universal claim fails.” Id. It then concluded that our EFF decision “dooms CREW’s complaint as currently articulated, because it establishes that at least one of OLC’s formal written opinions—the opinion in EFF—is exempt from FOIA disclosure.” Id. at 155. The court, however, acknowledged that CREW might state a viable claim if it “amend[ed] its complaint to allege that some specific subset of OLC’s formal written opinions [is] being unlawfully withheld.” Id. at 156. The court therefore gave CREW leave to amend its complaint. Id. CREW declined to amend its complaint, however, opting instead to appeal.

Notably, CREW is not the only advocacy group seeking to compel disclosure of the OLC’s formal written opinions in toto.

Campaign for Accountability (CfA), amicus in this appeal, filed a similar suit under FOIA’s reading-room provision. See Campaign for Accountability v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 278 F. Supp. 3d 303, 305 (D.D.C. 2017). There, as here, the district court concluded that EFF foreclosed a universal claim and offered leave to amend the complaint. Id. at 320–23. Unlike CREW, CfA accepted the invitation and amended its complaint to allege that several subcategories of the OLC’s formal written opinions are subject to disclosure under FOIA’s reading-room provision. See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 33–49, Campaign for Accountability v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, No. 1:16-cv-1068 (D.D.C. Oct. 27, 2017). The Department of Justice’s motion to dismiss CfA’s amended complaint remains pending.

II. ANALYSIS

The Court reviews de novo the dismissal of a complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Coburn v. Evercore Tr. Co., N.A., 844 F.3d 965, 968 (D.C. Cir. 2016). To state a claim under FOIA, CREW must plausibly allege “that an agency has (1) ‘improperly’; (2) ‘withheld’; (3) ‘agency records.’” Competitive Enter. Inst. v. Office of Sci. & Tech. Policy, 827 F.3d 145, 147 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (quoting Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 150 (1980)). In this case, there is no dispute that the formal written opinions the OLC has declined to publish are “withheld” “agency records.” The only remaining question is whether the OLC has withheld those opinions “improperly.”

An agency withholds its records “improperly” if it fails to comply with one of FOIA’s “mandatory disclosure requirements.” U.S. Dep’t of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 150 (1989). Relevant here, FOIA’s reading-room provision mandates that an agency disclose certain enumerated categories of records. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2). As previously described, these categories include “final opinions . . . in the adjudication of cases” and “statements of policy and interpretations which have been adopted by the agency.” Id. § 552(a)(2)(A)–(B). The United States Supreme Court has explained that these categories of records constitute the “working law” of an agency because they “have ‘the force and effect of law.’” NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 153 (1975) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1497, at 7 (1966)). An OLC opinion in the latter category qualifies as the “working law” of an agency only if the agency has “adopted” the opinion as its own. EFF, 739 F.3d at 9. Thus, the dispositive question before us is whether CREW has plausibly alleged that the OLC’s formal written opinions have all been adopted by the agencies to which they were addressed, subjecting the opinions to disclosure under FOIA’s reading-room provision as the “working law” of those agencies.

CREW’s complaint makes no such allegation. It instead alleges only that the OLC’s formal written opinions are “controlling,” “authoritative” and “binding.” As EFF noted, these descriptors alone are insufficient to render an OLC opinion the “working law” of an agency; that OLC opinions are “controlling (insofar as agencies customarily follow OLC advice that they request), precedential, and can be withdrawn . . . does not overcome the fact that OLC does not speak with authority on the [agency’s] policy.” Id.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> CREW urges that the OLC opinion at issue in EFF was not a formal written opinion because it was not “prospective” and because it only examined “policy options.” We disagree. EFF described the OLC opinion as “bear[ing] . . . indicia of a binding legal decision,” including that the opinion was “controlling” and “precedential.” Id. at 9. Moreover, the OLC opinion in EFF examined the FBI’s policy options by “describ[ing] the legal parameters of what the FBI is permitted to do”—which most

Importantly, CREW does not allege that all of the OLC's formal written opinions have been adopted by any agency as its own.<sup>2</sup> Because CREW's complaint fails to allege the additional facts necessary to render an OLC opinion the "working law" of an agency, CREW's claim that all of the OLC's formal written opinions are subject to disclosure under FOIA's reading-room provision fails as a matter of law.<sup>3</sup>

CREW and the dissent raise four primary objections to our analysis. First, CREW contends that our approach erroneously places on CREW the burden of identifying a subset of the OLC's formal written opinions that constitutes the "working law" of an agency and is therefore subject to disclosure under FOIA's reading-room provision. Granted, as CREW emphasizes, FOIA places the burden "on the agency to sustain its action," 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B), and the agency therefore bears the burden of proving that it has not "improperly" withheld the requested records, Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 142 n.3. But the OLC's ultimate burden of proof does not alter the antecedent requirement that CREW plead a plausible claim. See Competitive Enter. Inst., 827 F.3d at 147 certainly is a legal determination. Id. at 10. Based on these descriptions, the OLC opinion in EFF has all the indicia of a formal written opinion, even as CREW defines that term in its complaint. See Best Practices Memo 1–2, 5.

---

<sup>2</sup> At the same time, we are skeptical of the Department of Justice's position that none of the OLC's formal written opinions constitutes the "working law" of an agency subject to disclosure under FOIA's reading-room provision. Presumably, at some point in the OLC's history, an agency may have adopted at least one of the OLC's formal written opinions as its own.

<sup>3</sup> CREW's derivative claim for indices of the OLC's formal written opinions thus also fails as a matter of law. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2) (agency must make available indices of records covered by FOIA's reading-room provision).

“Jurisdiction under FOIA requires ‘a showing that an agency has (1) “improperly”; (2) “withheld”; (3) “agency records.”’ Our task, then, is to determine whether the pleadings in the present case allege these requirements sufficiently to survive a motion under Rule 12(b)(6).” (citation omitted) (quoting Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 455 U.S. at 150)). To survive a motion to dismiss, CREW must allege in its complaint “sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to ‘state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). In other words, CREW must do more than allege “facts that are ‘merely consistent with’ a defendant’s liability” or raise only “a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully.” Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). Thus, regardless of the OLC’s ultimate burden of proof, CREW must first allege factual matter supporting a plausible claim that the OLC “improperly” withheld its formal written opinions—that is, that FOIA’s reading-room provision contains a “mandatory disclosure requirement[.]” obligating the OLC to make those opinions available, Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 150.

We impose this standard in assessing claims brought under FOIA’s reactive provision. Section 552(a)(3) imposes a mandatory disclosure requirement on agencies “upon any request for records” that “reasonably describes such records” and complies with procedural regulations. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(A). Thus, to plead a plausible claim that an agency has “improperly” withheld its records, we require a plaintiff proceeding under FOIA’s reactive provision to allege that it made a procedurally compliant request. Cf. Elec. Privacy Info. Ctr. v. IRS, 910 F.3d 1232, 1235–36, 1239–43 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (affirming dismissal of FOIA claim for tax records of third party when plaintiff failed to obtain third-party’s consent as required by Internal Revenue Code and accompanying IRS regulations). If a plaintiff alleges that it has made a procedurally compliant request, the agency must then bear its burden to justify its withholding of records by, for example, demonstrating at summary judgment that the requested documents are exempt from disclosure. See, e.g., Am. Civil Liberties Union v. U.S. Dep't of Def., 628 F.3d 612, 619 (D.C. Cir. 2011).

Although FOIA's reading-room provision differs from its reactive provision, the analytical mechanics remain the same. Whether an agency must disclose records under FOIA's reading-room provision turns not on the existence of a plaintiff's request but on the nature of the records—whether they fall within one of § 552(a)(2)'s enumerated categories of documents. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2). Thus, to plead a plausible claim that the OLC has “improperly” withheld its formal written opinions under FOIA's reading-room provision, CREW must allege sufficient factual material about the opinions that—if taken as true—would place them into one of § 552(a)(2)'s enumerated categories. Then, and only then, would the OLC bear its burden to justify withholding its formal written opinions. But as previously explained, CREW has alleged only that the OLC's formal written opinions are “controlling,” “authoritative” and “binding,” which under EFF is insufficient to support a plausible claim that the opinions are the “working law” of an agency subject to disclosure under § 552(a)(2). See 739 F.3d at 9. In sum, the OLC's burden to sustain its action does not alter our conclusion that CREW has first failed to plead a plausible claim.

Second, the dissent argues that in any event, CREW's complaint alleges sufficient factual material to state a plausible claim that the OLC's formal written opinions are subject to disclosure under FOIA's reading-room provision. Dissent 2–4. Revealingly, however, the dissent does not rest its analysis solely on the factual allegations in CREW's complaint—that the OLC's formal written opinions are “controlling,” “authoritative” and “binding”; instead, the dissent supplements those allegations with others not contained in the complaint. For example, the dissent presents one of the OLC's formal written opinions regarding the Defense of Marriage Act as an example of an opinion that may be subject to disclosure under FOIA's reading-room provision. Id. at 3–4. Regardless of the plausibility of the complaint the dissent describes, that is not the complaint CREW filed in the district court. We are therefore left with assessing the sufficiency of CREW's actual allegations that the OLC's formal written opinions are “controlling,” “authoritative” and “binding.” As we have explained, these allegations alone are insufficient to present a plausible claim that the OLC's formal written opinions fall within one of the reading-room provision's enumerated categories.

Third, the dissent argues that we draw too much from EFF and thus require CREW to plead around potential FOIA exemptions. Id. at 4–6. The dissent, however, wrongly treats EFF as only an exemption case. Although EFF ultimately held that an OLC formal written opinion is exempt from disclosure, the decision adopted the broader rule that the OLC's formal written opinions are not the “working law” of an agency simply because they are nominally “controlling.” 739 F.3d at 9. In the context of FOIA's reading-room provision, that an OLC formal written opinion is not the working law of an agency means that it does not fall within one of the reading-room's enumerated categories and therefore is not subject to disclosure even absent an exemption. See Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. at 153. Thus, our decision today does not require CREW to anticipate potential exemptions; consistent with EFF, it requires only that CREW plead more than that the OLC's formal written opinions are “controlling” to make out a plausible claim that the opinions are the working law of an agency subject to disclosure under FOIA's reading-room provision.

Fourth, CREW complains that requiring it to identify a subset of the OLC's formal written opinions subject to FOIA's reading-room provision is unfair as a matter of policy because it "imposes a burden of proof that is almost impossible for CREW to meet." But the purported unfairness CREW faces is self-inflicted. CREW declined to avail itself of other measures at its disposal, not the least of which was acceptance of the district court's invitation to amend its complaint as amicus CfA has done.<sup>4</sup> See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 33–49, Campaign for Accountability, No. 1:16-cv-1068 (amended complaint identifies several subcategories of OLC's formal written opinions CfA believes are subject to FOIA's reading-room provision).<sup>5</sup> CREW also would have had no difficulty carrying its pleading burden, and thereby putting the OLC to its burden to sustain its action, had it proceeded under FOIA's reactive provision, § 552(a)(3), and requested formal written opinions the OLC issued on specific subjects. See, e.g., Judicial Watch, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Def., 913 F.3d 1106, 1108 (D.C. Cir. 2019) (addressing at summary judgment FOIA request for memoranda prepared for the President in relation to his decision to order military strike on Osama bin Laden's Pakistani compound); EFF, 739 F.3d at 6 (addressing at summary judgment FOIA request for OLC opinion discussing

---

<sup>4</sup> Unsurprisingly, after supplementing CREW's complaint with allegations identifying at least two subsets of the OLC's formal written opinions potentially subject to disclosure under FOIA's reading-room provision, Dissent 2–4, the dissent finds requiring CREW to amend its complaint unnecessary, id. at 6–7.

<sup>5</sup> We do not address the merits of CfA's amended complaint.

FBI's use of "exigent letters"). CREW's failure to pursue these alternatives causes its cries of unfairness to ring hollow.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup> CREW raises two other objections that we dismiss by footnote. First, CREW asserts that the district court "err[ed] in its construction of the fundamental nature of CREW's claims" by "mischaracteriz[ing] the Complaint as premised on a claim for all OLC opinions." CREW thus suggests the district court improperly understood CREW's complaint to seek not only the OLC's formal written opinions but also its informal opinions and other forms of "controlling" legal advice. We are not persuaded. The district court accurately recounted that "the complaint contends that 'OLC's formal written opinions, described in the Best Practices Memo,' are subject to mandatory publication under 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2)." 298 F. Supp. 3d at 153 (emphasis added) (quoting Compl. ¶ 27). The court then proceeded to discuss only "formal written opinions," using the phrase over twenty times in a five-page opinion. See id. at 152–56. And in discussing the relevance of our EFF decision, the district court emphasized "[t]here is every indication" that the OLC opinion at issue in that case "was both formal and written." Id. at 154 n.4. CREW's assertion that the district court misconstrued its complaint is therefore baseless.

Second, CREW complains that the district court misconstrued EFF as "establishing that all or virtually all OLC opinions CREW seeks are privileged and therefore not subject to FOIA's reading room provision." CREW bases its complaint on the district court's observation that "[e]ven more broadly, [EFF] suggests that many of OLC's formal written opinions would be subject to the same deliberative process privilege." 298 F. Supp. 3d at 155. Here it is CREW, not the district court, who is guilty of misconstruction. The district court's observation that EFF "suggests that many of OLC's formal written opinions" are privileged—a fair reading of EFF—is a far cry from the proposition CREW now attributes to the court: that EFF "establish[es] that all or virtually all OLC opinions" are privileged. We see no error in the district court's characterization of EFF.

15

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court dismissing CREW's complaint is affirmed.

So ordered.

Pillard, Circuit Judge, dissenting: It is not certain at this stage how much—if any—of OLC’s output might ultimately be subject to disclosure under FOIA’s reading-room provision. But “a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of . . . facts [supporting relief] is improbable, and ‘that a recovery is very remote and unlikely.’” Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556 (2007) (quoting Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236 (1974)). The sole issue before us is the threshold question whether CREW has alleged enough to survive a motion to dismiss. Because I believe that it has, I would reverse the contrary judgment of the district court.

* * *

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8, a complaint must contain “a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). “[T]he pleadings must ‘give the defendants fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests,’ but the Rule ‘does not require detailed factual allegations.’” Jones v. Kirchner, 835 F.3d 74, 79 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009)). CREW plausibly alleges that at least some OLC opinions fall within FOIA’s reading-room provision, because they are either “final opinions . . . made in the adjudication of cases” or “interpretations which have been adopted by the agency and are not published in the Federal Register,” 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2)(A)-(B). Documents meeting either description are “working law” within the meaning of Tax Analysts v. IRS, 294 F.3d 71, 81-82 (D.C. Cir. 2002), which OLC must routinely make electronically available to the public without a FOIA request. The question whether any of OLC’s work product is covered by the reading-room disclosure requirement of Section 552(a)(2) is one of first impression, and the answer is not obvious. But the complaint as pleaded certainly alleges the relevant facts sufficiently to have posed the legal question to the district court.

CREW has described—often in OLC’s own words—that Office’s adjudicative process and the authoritative nature of its opinions. The facts that CREW alleges to support its claim that OLC issues “final opinions” in the “adjudication of cases” describe OLC’s role as an authoritative decider of disputes between and among entities within the executive branch. According to OLC’s own website and Best Practices Memo, both of which are publicly accessible and are referenced and quoted in CREW’s complaint, OLC provides controlling advice in interagency disputes when asked. J.A. 9, 11 (Compl. ¶¶ 18-19, 27, Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Wash. v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, Case No. 1:17-cv-00432, ECF No. 1 (“Compl.”)). To inform OLC’s decisions in such cases, the Office uses an adversary process: Contending agencies weigh in with memoranda or other communications reflecting their legal positions. Based on such “briefing,” OLC renders its decisions. Those decisions may or may not as a legal matter amount to “final opinions . . . made in the adjudication of cases” within the meaning of Section 552(a)(2); perhaps “adjudications” between two parts of the executive branch are not the kind of “adjudication of cases” to which that section refers. But CREW’s allegations suffice to fairly present its claim that they are.

CREW also alleges facts sufficient to raise its parallel claim that OLC renders “interpretations which have been adopted by the agency” within the meaning of Section 552(a)(2). The complaint plausibly alleges that another role of OLC is to provide legal advice that is “authoritative” and “binding by custom and practice in the executive branch”—statements of what the law permits or requires that “[p]eople are supposed to and do follow.” J.A. 9 (Compl. ¶¶ 18-19)

(internal quotation marks omitted). The complaint alleges that certain of OLC's opinions are "controlling" interpretations, and even "may effectively be the final word on controlling law" in some situations. Id.

The Best Practices Memo bolsters those allegations by explaining that OLC provides opinions to independent agencies only if they have agreed to be bound by—i.e., will adopt—OLC's advice. For purposes of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, we treat as true CREW's factual allegations that client agencies accept OLC opinions as "controlling," "authoritative," and "binding." There is extra reason to do so here insofar as the allegations quote and track published descriptions by OLC veterans of the Office's work as including a category of legal interpretations that agencies believe they must, and do, adopt. Again, CREW's legal theory may ultimately fail. It may be that the agreement of one part of the executive branch (the agency "client") to follow a legal interpretation offered by another part of the branch (OLC) is not what Section 552(a)(2) means by "interpretations which have been adopted by the agency." But CREW plausibly alleges a regular category of OLC's work product that, it contends, matches the statutory description—sufficiently teeing up its claim for the district court.

By way of illustration, CREW has pointed to publicly available opinions that—although not disclosed under the reading-room provision—plausibly are subject to its requirements. One of the opinions it identified, for example, addressed whether the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) prevented the nonbiological child of a civil union from qualifying for insurance benefits under the Social Security Act. The government published that opinion and has made it electronically available to the public on its website, but the government's litigation position is that it was not required to do so—whether pursuant to the reading-room provision or otherwise. CREW disagrees, because in seeking OLC’s advice on the DOMA question, the Social Security Administration had agreed to be bound by whatever interpretation the Office made. See OLC, Whether the Defense of Marriage Act Precludes the Nonbiological Child of a Member of a Vermont Civil Union from Qualifying for Child’s Insurance Benefits Under the Social Security Act 243 n.1 (Oct. 16, 2007), <https://www.justice.gov/file/451616/download>. CREW accordingly argues that OLC’s opinion was an “interpretation[] which ha[d] been adopted by the agency,” and so was subject to Section 552(a)(2). Contrary to the court’s assertion, however, it was not necessary for CREW to cite that opinion in its complaint for it to exemplify a category of OLC opinions that the complaint plausibly pleads must be published electronically under FOIA’s reading-room provision.

The court rejects CREW’s claim by reasoning, in effect, that CREW has asked for more relief than it can get. It points to an OLC opinion that arguably provided a “controlling legal interpretation[],” J.A. 5, but that this court held in Electronic Frontier Foundation v. U.S. Department of Justice, 739 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (EFF), was protected from disclosure by the deliberative process privilege, id. at 4. I agree that EFF shows that there is a subcategory of opinions (encompassing at least one, and likely many more) that need not be disclosed under the reading-room provision, whether because they have not been adopted by the receiving agency, or are subject to a FOIA exemption, or both. But the majority makes too much soup from one oyster. EFF could only defeat CREW’s merits claim if we were certain that every one of the Office’s opinions would be shielded from disclosure for the reasons that were dispositive in EFF. The government does not so claim, however, and my colleagues do not so hold. The identification of a single opinion that could be withheld even were plaintiff’s legal theory correct is no basis upon which to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim. Indeed, the majority itself is “skeptical of the Department of Justice’s position that none of the OLC’s formal written opinions constitutes the ‘working law’ of an agency subject to disclosure under FOIA’s reading-room provision.” Op. 9 n.2. That alone should be enough, in light of the government’s affirmative legal obligation under the reading-room provision, to entitle the claim to proceed.

The majority faults CREW for asking for “all” formal written OLC opinions, rather than making a more tailored request. See, e.g., Op. 8-9. But just because we might conceive of more exact ways to ask for the documents does not mean that CREW’s pleading falls short. The complaint makes clear that CREW is seeking those documents that fall within the definition of what the government is required to publish under the reading-room provision. In its complaint, CREW alleges that “OLC has refused to produce . . . its formal written opinions setting forth controlling legal interpretations,” J.A. 5 (Compl. ¶ 2), as well as its “final opinions made in the adjudication of cases,” J.A. 10-11 (Compl. ¶ 26). Taking the complaint in the light most favorable to CREW, it is not requesting anything that FOIA exempts. And, even if the terms of the complaint could be read to sweep in the OLC opinion from EFF, an overambitious remedial request does not defeat a plausibly alleged legal claim.

By requiring more detail from CREW at this stage, the court effectively forces CREW to anticipate and plead around any FOIA-exemption defense the government might raise. But a potential defense not yet asserted is no ground upon which to dismiss a complaint. It is firmly established that “a plaintiff is not required to negate an affirmative defense in his complaint.” Flying Food Grp., Inc. v. NLRB, 471 F.3d 178, 183 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (internal quotation marks omitted); accord Gomez v.

Toledo, 446 U.S. 635, 640 (1980). At the Rule 12(b)(6) stage, CREW's burden is limited to plausibly pleading that at least some OLC opinions are "working law" and are therefore covered by the reading-room provision—a burden it has neatly carried. It is the government's burden, in its turn, to allege and show that some or all of the documents sought are subject to a FOIA exemption. Requiring CREW, on pain of dismissal, to request only documents that are not exempt erroneously places the government's burden on CREW's shoulders.

The majority's position is puzzling from a practical standpoint as well. It is hard to see what more might be required to state CREW's claim. The parallel litigation in Campaign for Accountability v. U.S. Department of Justice underscores the point. As the majority notes, unlike CREW, plaintiff Campaign for Accountability did amend its complaint to describe subcategories of OLC opinions that it believes are not exempt from FOIA and so must be disclosed. See Am. Compl. 12-19, Campaign for Accountability v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, Case No. 1:16-cv-01068, ECF No. 22. Those subcategories are "[o]pinions resolving interagency disputes," "[o]pinions issued to independent agencies," "[o]pinions interpreting non-discretionary legal obligations," "[o]pinions finding that particular statutes are unconstitutional and that therefore agencies need not comply with them," and "[o]pinions adjudicating or determining private rights." Id. at 13, 15-16, 18-19. The government there again moved to dismiss the amended complaint, arguing that neither OLC's binding opinions generally nor the subcategories the plaintiff identified in its amended complaint are subject to publication under the reading-room provision. See Mem. Supp. Def.'s Renewed Mot. Dismiss Am. Compl. i-ii, Campaign for Accountability, Case No. 1:16-cv-01068, ECF No. 29-1. The claim posed by the amended complaint in Campaign for Accountability is not materially different from the claim CREW's complaint advances.

Contrary to the majority's view, the obstacle CREW challenges is not "self-inflicted," Op. 13. The alternatives the majority proposes—amending the complaint, or seeking documents under FOIA's reactive provision, Section 552(a)(3)—are unresponsive to CREW's claim that OLC is not complying with its affirmative legal duties under the reading-room provision, Section 552(a)(2). As just noted, Campaign for Accountability effectively reiterates the same claim that CREW already adequately pleads. And the suggestion that plaintiff should proceed via FOIA's reactive provision is also off the mark: Shunting plaintiff down a different statutory path that requires it to request particular documents is no answer to its claim for reading-room access to electronic versions of Section 552(a)(2) documents without any FOIA request. The point of the reading-room provision, after all, is to put the burden on agencies to make their "working law" readily available, without request, to anyone who might want to read it.

In sum, the government's position is that the body of OLC documents that are subject to the reading-room provision is a null set; CREW's position is that it is not. The grounds of CREW's claim are clear enough from the face of its complaint. It may or may not be overly ambitious in its request, and the government may or may not be overly protective in its position that no OLC opinions need be published under the reading-room provision. In either event, the claim is adequately pleaded.

* * *

"Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief [is] . . . a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. To survive a motion to dismiss, the complaint need only plausibly allege facts sufficient to ground its challenge to the government’s zero-disclosure position. I believe it does so. The Rule 8 pleading standard requires no further allegations. Because I conclude that CREW’s allegations plainly suffice to state a claim, entitling it to a remand for further proceedings, I respectfully dissent.